Judge orders company to maintain policies

The Associated Press

POCATELLO — A 6th District Court judge issued a temporary restraining order against Colonial Penn Insurance Co. Tuesday, requiring it to continue liability insurance coverage for more than 90 local government entities in Idaho who feared their policies had lapsed 15 hours earlier.

The order against the Philadelphia insurance company signed by Judge Peter McDermott keeps the policies in effect until Oct. 14. It also insures continued liability coverage for the state, which had a Colonial Penn policy as well.

"The company will not extend these policies voluntarily and they've acted cavalierly in this case," said Deputy Attorney General Scott Wolfley, who coordinated the class action suit that prompted McDermott's order.

"I've told them that if they don't take this seriously, we're ready to conduct the war," Wolfley said, adding that the lawsuit may finally convince Colonial Penn to voluntarily extend coverage to the end of this year as other companies have agreed to do.

In addition to seeking court-ordered extension of their policies, the 92 cities and counties also asked the court for $50 million in damages and $50,000 in attorneys fees from the company. McDermott has not scheduled a hearing on extension of his order or the merits of the damage claim.

The disruption in coverage, even if only momentary, had left local officials facing the possibility of lawsuits without protection. They had been warned to take no controversial actions until coverage was assured, and in southeastern Idaho, the city of Ammon delayed the start of its own police force Tuesday because it could not get liability insurance.

Some local officials have threatened to resign rather than face personal liability for official actions, and just hours before the court order, Rupert Mayor Bill Whittom petitioned Gov. John Evans for a special legislative session to deal with the insurance crisis. Evans' administration officials said a special session would only be necessary if the Colonial Penn situation could not be resolved.

Colonial Penn has stood alone among the liability insurance companies providing coverage to local Idaho governmental entities in refusing to relent on its midnight Monday cancelation of expiring liability policies. Company officials have relied firmly on contract provisions allowing cancelation with only 30 day notice.

"They knew what kind of position they were putting these people in," Wolfley said. "They knew these cities and counties couldn't find new insurance in 30 days, and they knew they were going to do this six months ago but they waited to tell these people until just 30 days before."

Some Perrine rooms empty, others overcrowded

By JANE ROBISON
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Seven classrooms sit vacant in the new Perrine Elementary School while first and sixth grade teachers must cope with too many students, because the district lacks enough money to hire more teachers.

"I don't blame the district because what can they do?" asked Vera Redman, who has two children attending Perrine. "They can't hire more teachers until the state wakes up and gives schools more money."

Redman, president of the Perrine Parent Teacher Organization, said her children were in the same situation at Harrison Elementary School last year. "We haven't lost anything, but we haven't gained anything, either," she said. "Obviously, to have a smaller class size is an advantage to the child."

Although Perrine is the newest school, it is not the only one with overcrowded classrooms. Bickel, Lincoln and Morningside elementary schools all have two or three classrooms with 30 students or more. The Idaho Department of Education recommends 25 students per class as the preferred size.

But at Perrine, which opened in September, the three first grade classes have 29, 31 and 31 students and the two sixth grade classes have 34 and 35 students in each. The school was built to hold 650 students. Current enrollment is 550.

Perrine Principal Billie Brown said she sent a letter to parents asking for volunteers to send their children to other elementary schools in the area, but there were no takers: "Parents prefer to have their children close to home," she said.

Twin Falls Superintendent Carl Snow said that, overall, the district is in better shape this year than last because enrollment is down by 70 elementary students. The district also hired three more elementary teachers this year, he said.

"All our other classes are just right," said Snow. "We have 100 classrooms, and only seven are overcrowded," he said. "Last year, about 12 or 13 classes were overcrowded."

The addition of Perrine has alleviated over-

Islamic abductors repeat death threat

By ED BLANCHE
The Associated Press

BEIRUT, Lebanon — A telephone caller said Tuesday that two of four kidnapped Soviet Embassy employees had been killed, but intelligence sources said they were alive and the abductors produced photographs of them with guns at their heads.

The instant photos, in color, were accompanied by a message saying they would be killed unless a Syrian-backed offensive against fundamentalist Moslem militiamen in the northern port of Tripoli was stopped.

It could not be determined when the photographs were taken.

They were delivered to a Western news agency in Beirut with a statement that said: "We will start carrying out the death sentence on the first hostage at 9 p.m. (noon MDT) sharp unless the atheistic campaign against Islamic Tripoli stops."

But hours after the deadline passed there was no indication any action had been taken against the hostages.

AP reporters in Tripoli said there was no letup in the militia push on the Islamic Unification fighters, who were cornered around the port with their backs to the sea.

President Reagan called the abductions "cowardly," the Soviet Union said it was taking "all necessary steps" to free the victims, and Syria offered "any assistance in our capacity" to gain the release of the Soviets and 14 Westerners held by kidnappers in Lebanon.

Two of the men in the photographs were identifiable as the kidnap victims from pictures in their residence permits, photocopies of which were

Heckler on her way to Dublin

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Margaret Heckler stepped down Tuesday as secretary of the Department of Health and Human Services to become ambassador to Ireland but President Reagan denounced reports that she was forced from the post as "malicious gossip" and "falsehood."

"I think Mrs. Heckler was justifiably upset by the kind of gossip that was going around," the president said as she stood at his side.

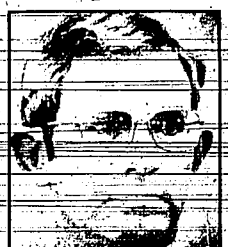
The president said a successor to Mrs. Heckler had not been chosen.

White House deputy press secretary Albert Brashear said Mrs. Heckler will remain at HHS until she is confirmed as ambassador by the Senate.

"We have a need for an ambassador and Ireland is getting very impatient," the president said. "I thought she might like a change of pace. I think she will be just great."

Mrs. Heckler is of Irish stock. Her full maiden name was Margaret Mary O'Shaughnessy.

Senator says Moon wasn't target for persecution



SEN. LAIRD NOH
Sent out copies of report

By DEAN S. MILLER
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — State Sen. Laird Noh, R-Kimberly, has sent a letter to some of his fellow senators detailing the tax crime conviction of the Rev. Sun Myung Moon, which Noh says had little to do with religious persecution — as has been claimed by Moon's supporters.

Moon was convicted in 1982 of conspiracy to file false federal income tax returns, obstruct justice, and make false statements to government agencies and a grand jury.

The Unification Church leader's supporters have said he was singled out for unfair treatment and have taken out full-page advertisements to that effect in the Washington Times (A Unification Church-owned newspaper) and in USA Today, the flagship paper of the nationwide Gannett chain.

Noh said he read the record of Moon's case in the Commerce Clearing House (CCH) reports, which are a standard federal tax law reporting service, and decided to send a copy of the CCH report on Moon's case to leaders in the Idaho Senate.

A number of Idaho senators and representatives have travelled at Unification Church expense to conferences on communism sponsored by the church's activist arm: Causa.

Noh said Monday the court record shows a different picture than that painted by the ads taken out on behalf of Moon. "I was surprised in reading the case how little it appeared, anyways, to do with questions of state versus religion and how much it appeared to have to do with fraud and deception or the manufacturing of false evidence."

Noh sent a few copies of the letter and the nearly 30-page CCH report to Senate leaders. "I think most of the people in the Legislature and probably even those involved (with Causa) would be glad to get all the information they can get."

His letter says: "Enclosed herein is some information which may be of interest. Although lengthy and in small print, it sheds light upon the activities of Sun Myung Moon and the Unification Church. For the faint of heart, I have summarized some salient aspects."

Noh's three-page letter outlines in brief form the case and the findings of the court. The appeals court found that Moon's charges of selective prosecution were not supported by evidence. The court also denied Moon's defense that since he is considered a "messiah" by some of his followers, his personal finances are indistinguishable from those of the church and are therefore not subject to taxes.

"We do not accept this defense. To allow otherwise would be to permit church leaders to stand above the law," the Appeals Court found.

Noh makes little comment on the case in his letter, but he tells legislators that a source of information about the Unification Church is available from the Citizen Freedom Foundation, Plainscroft, N.Y. organization.

The Kimberly Republican said he has so far found almost universal negative response on the part of the public to legislator involvement in the Causa anti-communism seminars.

He said he expects to see little evidence of Causa influence in the coming session of the Legislature. "My sense of the Legislature is that there'll be less of that rather than more," Noh said.

TWIN FALLS — The conviction of the Rev. Sun Myung Moon in 1982 for conspiracy to file false income tax returns and for manufacturing evidence to present in court, is omitted, from full-page newspaper ads taken out on behalf of Moon by the Washington-based Committee to Defend the U.S. Constitution.

In the ads, Moon is portrayed as a victim of religious persecution and selective prosecution who merely owed $7,300 in back taxes.

A July 9 ad in the Washington Times said Rev. Moon went to jail for allegedly failing to pay taxes of $7,300. When Vice President Bush, Reverend Moon and Mr. Kamiyama (Moon's tax advisor) were tried charged them in Count One with conspiracy to file false federal income tax returns, to obstruct justice, to make false statements to government agencies, and to file a false document with the Internal Revenue Service. The federal record tells a different story.

The federal record tells a different story in a report on the case by Commerce Clearing House (CCH), a standard federal tax law reporter, the Appeals Court judge's decision begins: "The main indictment upon which Reverend Moon and Mr. Kamiyama (Moon's Unification Church) the U.S. Constitution said Moon:

Chemical fells officer

POCATELLO (AP) — A park was evacuated and a Pocatello policeman was hospitalized briefly Tuesday afternoon after inhaling dangerous fumes from an industrial chemical that leaked from a railroad tanker, authorities said.

Officer Pat Davis, 24, was treated and released from Bannock Regional Medical Center, a hospital spokeswoman said. He had driven himself to the hospital before paramedics arrived on the scene.

Fire Department Capt. Tom Floyd said a small amount, probably less than five gallons, of styrene monomer leaked from a loose pipe attached to a valve on a tanker car at the Union Pacific Railroad yard on Pocatello's south side.

AMERICAN FALLS (AP) — An employee of the Lamb-Weston Inc. potato processing plant here died when a loading ramp fell on him, the Power County Sheriff's Department says.

Eduardo Orozco Rodriguez, 32, American Falls, died from injuries sustained in the 10:30 p.m. Monday accident, authorities said. The accident occurred when a loading ramp held by a forklift fell.

U.S. looks at fine print

GENEVA, Switzerland (AP) — U.S. negotiators on Tuesday began examining the fine print of new Soviet arms control proposals that the chief Soviet delegate said were comprehensive and "well-balanced."

The Soviet delegation, led by Viktor P. Karpov, made the proposals during two hours of meetings at two special sessions attended by all six principal negotiators on Monday and Tuesday.

Karpov, speaking to reporters before Tuesday's session, refused to give specifics of the offer but said it included cuts "as drastic as possible nowadays."

Korean general probed

WASHINGTON (AP) — A retired Korean air force general, alleged to have bribed Korean officials on behalf of the General Dynamics Corp., collected $6.5 million in sales agent for five U.S. defense contractors but kept about half the money outside Korea, according to a congressional investigation.

Gen. Bung-Yul Yoon, who now lives in San Francisco, was a paid consultant for General Electric, United Technologies Corp., LTV Aerospace, Martin Marietta Corp., and General Dynamics, according to a report by the House Energy and Commerce investigations subcommittee.

Yoon and his company, Buycon Co. Ltd., were paid $6.5 million by the contractors from 1973 until this year, according to the subcommittee staff report.

Old Farmer's Almanac forecast out

Heavy snow, colder winter due across northern third of nation

CONCORD, N.H. (AP) — The Old Farmer's Almanac hits newsstands this week with predictions of a colder winter with heavy snow for the northern third of the nation, tales of animal heroism and the secret to finding true love.

The Almanac, the nation's oldest continuously published periodical, predicts a warmer and drier winter than normal for most of the southern two-thirds of the country, although the southern Atlantic states, western Great Plains and southern California will have wetter than usual weather.

The familiar yellow and black-covered book has been forecasting the weather with claims of considerable accuracy since 1792.

Other weather predictions include a cold spring east of the Rocky Mountains, warm in the West and generally dry except for wet weather in the far West, portions of the Southeast and the southern Great Plains and Ohio Valley.

Summer will be warmer and drier than normal east of the Rockies, except for heavy rainfall in the northern Great Plains, southern Atlantic states and northern New England.

"Traditionally, we, like all almanacs, claim an 80 percent accuracy rate," said Executive Editor Tim Clark. "We are very fond of traditions and would not think of changing them."

The almanac predicts the best times to plant and fish and the date-of-the-last-frost. This year it also contains a sightings-chart to pin-point Halley's Comet from November to May.

Like the previous 193 years, this year's Almanac has a hole in the upper left-hand corner, making it easy for the book to be hung up in the kitchen, outhouse or wherever it might come in handy.

"We have a debate every year whether to continue with that hole," Clark said, adding that it means additional headaches because the holes must be drilled after printing is complete.

"But we feel that hole has become an important part of the tradition as any other part of the Almanac," he said. "Look for the hole to remain."

Each year it has bundles of trivia tidbits, many of which are donated by the Almanac's readers, Clark said.

The Almanac is not to be confused with a younger Maine publication called the Farmer's Almanac, which is given away by businesses as a promotion.

circulated by the kidnappers earlier in the day. Lebanese authorities verified that the permits were authentic.

The photos and statement purportedly were from the Islamic Liberation Organization, Khaled Ben-al-Walid forces, the Beirut Sector. It is a Sunni Moslem group linked to the Islamic Unification movement.

The anonymous telephone caller, claiming to speak for the fundamentalist organization Islamic Holy War, said earlier Tuesday that two of the Soviets had been killed. But Lebanese intelligence sources said they were alive and had been held in predominantly Moslem west Beirut since they were seized there Monday in two separate abductions.

The intelligence sources, who spoke on condition of anonymity, told The Associated Press two were being held by the Hezbollah, or Party of God, and the others by Islamic Holy War, or Jihad Islami. Both are fundamentalist Shiite Moslem groups.

The anonymous caller who said he spoke for Islamic Holy War said the two Soviets killed were the commercial attache and the embassy doctor. When they were kidnapped Monday, police identified the commercial attache as Oleg Sprin and the physician as Nikolai Versky.

The other two Soviets abducted were the cultural attache, Arkady Katakov, and Valery Kornev, the embassy second secretary.

There have been several anonymous calls since the embassy employees were kidnapped. All the callers claimed to represent the kidnappers. All demanded that Syria halt the offensive against Islamic Unification in Tripoli.

church business which, according to the Justice Dept.'s own estimate, would have totalled $7,300 plus interest.

•Claimed the money in question belonged to Unification Church and that he held it in trust as Catholic bishops and many Baptist ministers do for their congregations.

•Was criminally indicted (even though three Justice Department career attorneys claimed independently of each other, that there was no case).

•Was denied a bench trial, even though the trial judge admitted that a non-jury trial would probably have been fairer.

In the court's narrative description of the case supplied by CCH, the Appeals Court wrote:

"A church leader was considered the owner, rather than the agent, trustee for the church, of unreported interest on bank accounts held in his name and unreported dividend income from stock received in exchange for assets transferred to the issuing corporation from corporations controlled by the church leader. He controlled the bank accounts and stock, held them in his own name, considered the funds as his own, used the accounts in a seemingly personal manner, and was regarded by other church figures as owning the assets. The church leader's conviction of willfully filing false returns was affirmed where the evidence indicated that documents were fraudulently backdated to support his position, he had knowledge from previous returns that interest income was taxable, he ignored tax advice from accountants and lawyers, and he engaged in a continuing course of conduct to file a false return. The conviction of the financial adviser to the church leader for aiding the preparation of false returns was also affirmed.

The judge also wrote: "Paying taxes is not America's most popular national pastime. But, most accept the certainty of taxes as part of the price of modern life."

In a July 17 ad in the Washington Times, the committee ran an ad entitled "Who's Next?" in which quotes from 15 people were printed in support of Moon.

In the ad, the Rev. Jerry Falwell, the leader of the Moral Majority, is quoted as saying, "We have the right to expect that we will have an unbiased treatment of the case — which, in fact, Rev. Moon in my opinion did not get."

Tim LaHaye, chairman of the American Coalition for Traditional Values, was quoted as saying, "His confinement is our confinement. My friends, if something is not done ... I fear that in 10 years, the religious freedoms we have today will all be gone."

Rev. Donald Sills, president of the Coalition for Religious Freedom, said, "Rev. Moon's case is just one of many. In 1974, there were only 45 cases of government intrusion in church affairs. Now there are more than 7,000 cases. We demand an end to these abuses."

Another ad listed about 30 organizations who submitted amicus curiae briefs to the Supreme Court in support of parts of Moon's case. Among those groups were the LDS church, the American Civil Liberties Union, Christian Voice, Inc., U.S. Sen. Orrin G. Hatch, R-Utah, and the Freeman Institute.

crowding at Harrison and Morningside schools, Snow said. Last year, enrollment was about 900 students at Harrison. This year it's down to 650 students. At Morningside, enrollment last year was more than 800. This year, it's down to 600, Snow said.

Still, he acknowledged overcrowding was a problem. "Sure we could use more teachers if we had the money," Snow said. "But we don't have the money."

Snow said three more teachers would help solve the problems. But three more teachers would cost the district $60,000.

The only other option is to ask parents to switch schools, since classes in some elementary schools, such as Bickel and Morningside, could handle more students.

But Snow said parents are reluctant to switch schools, especially if it splits the family, forcing several children in one family to go to different schools.

"Right now, our hands are tied," he said.

In the meantime, teachers will make the best of it, said Ray Grubbs, president of the Twin Falls Education Association. "Until the district gets more money from the Legislature, teachers will have to function under those conditions," Grubbs said.

Victims' rights recognized

BOISE (AP) — The advent of October has brought with it what state officials have called a "new era" in criminal procedures that will finally recognize the rights of victims as well as criminals.

The new state law enacted last winter setting out a victims' "bill of rights" and mandating criminals to make restitution for their crimes took effect Tuesday.

Attorney General Jim Jones calls the victims' rights law a "turning point" in Idaho's criminal justice system, contending that for too long the courts have concentrated on the rights of the accused at the expense of victims.

The law, which will cover any person charged with a crime beginning on Tuesday, requires a judge in sentencing a criminals to order that they pay restitution for the economic losses suffered by their victims. If that is not possible, the judge must formally explain why restitution was not ordered.

DONALD ENGEN
FAA head discounts accidents

Safe air travel assured

WASHINGTON (AP) — While acknowledging problems in air safety, the chairman of the National Transportation Safety Board said Tuesday that airliners are still "the safest way to travel" and the public should not be unduly alarmed by the rash of aviation accidents this year.

But NTSB Chairman Jim Burnett told the Senate Commerce aviation subcommittee that the Federal Aviation Administration has failed to respond to changes brought on by airline deregulation, including the rapid increase in the number of small airlines and increased air traffic.

He said FAA inspectors are not only too few in number but often have "a very gentlemanly" relationship with the airlines they are supposed to monitor. Breakdowns in communications and coordination among air traffic controllers, especially in towers of busy airports, also remain "very disturbing," he said.

The hearing was called to examine a variety of air safety issues against a backdrop of an unprecedented string of airline accidents worldwide that has claimed more than 1,600 lives this year.

Asked whether air travel was safe, Burnett, whose agency investigates airline accidents, replied: "I don't think there's any basis for the aviation consumer to be alarmed over a degradation of safety."

FAA Administrator Donald Engen, testifying separately, also disputed suggestions that the rash of accidents reflect a less safe aviation system.

"We're keeping the system safe. I will not allow the system to become unsafe," Engen told the subcommittee, promising to "bear down" on airlines to assure that they follow federal air safety regulations.

But Engen rejected a suggestion that the FAA might have to restrict the number of planes allowed into the air, saying he has "found no reason to constrain" traffic and preferred "to let air commerce flow freely."

Various air safety experts as well as some members of Congress have raised concern that the number and experience level of air traffic controllers may be insufficient to deal with the busy flow of traffic brought on by deregulation and a rising economy.

The FAA plans to hire another 1,000 controllers over the next two years, but several witnesses agreed Tuesday that the problem stems not only from the number of controllers, but their lack of seasoning.

Meanwhile, a General Accounting Office survey of 5,000 working controllers concluded that most believe they are handling too many airplanes during peak hours and that the heavy workload is "adversely affecting the safety of the system."

Nearly four of every 10 supervisors shared that opinion, said Herbert R. McLure, who conducted the survey for the GAO, an investigative arm of Congress.

Crews battle crude oil spill

DELAWARE CITY, Del. (AP) — The Coast Guard opened a command center here Tuesday as officials stepped up efforts to clean up a Delaware River oil spill that threatens sensitive wetlands in New Jersey and Delaware.

The Coast Guard and private contractors were trying to keep the spill of North Sea crude from spreading to New Jersey's Salem Cove, said Coast Guard Petty Officer Mike Kelley.

New England Pollution Control began laying 5,500 feet of boom to keep the oil from getting to the cove, said Kelley. He said an additional 15,000 feet of containment boom was on the way.

Officials also planned to stretch booms across the Killcohook National Wildlife Refuge in Salem County, N.J., and the Chesapeake & Delaware Canal Tuesday.

U.S. finds problems with Soviet arms proposal

By BARRY SCHWEID
The Associated Press

UNITED NATIONS, N.Y. — The Reagan administration views the new Soviet proposal to reduce nuclear weapons as a breakthrough in the negotiations stalemate but unacceptable to the United States on two important fronts.

It fails to offer reductions in the intermediate-range missiles the Soviets have targeted on Western Europe. And it seeks to scuttle President Reagan's "Star Wars" program of anti-missile research as condition for cutbacks in Soviet long-range strategic weapons.

At the same time, though, administration sources said Tuesday, the Soviets offered to make deep reductions and to count warheads and not just missile launchers in any weapons reduction agreement.

These are two long-standing U.S. goals in the slow-moving talks in Geneva, Switzerland.

"It's a mixed bag," said an official, who demanded anonymity. "It's a very comprehensive proposal, but presents problems on a number of fronts."

Analysis

An outline of the new Soviet offer was contained in a letter from Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev to Reagan. It was delivered last Friday by Foreign Minister Eduard A. Shevardnadze and publicly welcomed by Reagan and Secretary of State George P. Shultz.

The outline called for a 50 percent reduction in U.S. and Soviet arms. But until the details were presented this week by Soviet negotiators at the bargaining table in Geneva, it was not known that the Soviets were excluding their European missiles in the offer.

And yet, the U.S. Pershing 2 missiles sent to Britain, Italy and West Germany to partially offset the Soviet arsenal were categorized as strategic weapons by the Soviets and would have to be cut back or eliminated, the sources said.

The U.S. proposal on the table in Geneva calls for a ceiling of 5,000 missile warheads on each side, no more than half of which could be on land-based missiles.

The aim, besides slowing down the arms race, is to force reductions in the heavy, multi-warhead Soviet missiles that are considered the principal nuclear threat to the United States.

The 1979 Strategic Arms Limitation Treaty imposed a ceiling of 2,160 missiles and bombers on both sides. By U.S. count, the Soviets have a total of about 2,500 compared with about 2,100 for the United States. The treaty has not been ratified, although both sides have promised not to undercut its principal provisions.

Earlier this year, the Soviets informally proposed a 20 percent reduction in missiles. After Gorbachev took over in March the Soviets raised the offer to 25 percent. Missiles, not warheads, were to be counted.

Because the new offer doubles the percentage of cutbacks and involves warheads, the Reagan administration welcomed the Soviet move. But in linking any reductions to the U.S. Strategic Defense Initiative, which seeks a shield against missile attack, the Soviet proposal is deemed unacceptable.

In fact, the Soviets apparently have hardened their position on Star Wars. Gorbachev, in an interview last month with Time magazine, seemed to acquiesce in U.S. laboratory research. But the proposal put on the table in Geneva reportedly seeks to stop research as well as the testing, development and deployment of futuristic space-based systems.

Reagan has refused to offer Star Wars as a "bargaining chip" and said he would not block the field-testing and development of anti-missile defenses.

Even though the United States agreed in January to consider offensive and defensive weapons together, U.S. officials insist the dispute over Star Wars should not stand in the way of an agreement to cut back missiles and bombers.

The Soviets, however, have made Star Wars their principal target in the negotiations, warning that the American program threatens to carry the nuclear arms race into space and to force a buildup in missiles to penetrate defenses.

Congress spurred for tax reform

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan, in a tart message to those in Congress who have expressed doubt his tax reform package will be approved this year, warned them Tuesday to "quit playing political games" and move ahead with the tax overhaul plan.

Reagan, in an address at the White House to a group of businessmen, lobbyists and trade association representatives, said tax reform is among the most pressing issues facing the country.

"There can be no greater demand upon the time and attention of the Congress," Reagan said. "For delay in enacting it, there can be no excuse."

"It can be passed this year if all of us do what we know is the statesmanlike thing to do and quit playing political games," Reagan said.

Addressing those who say public interest in his plan is flagging, the president said: "The public is further along on this than some of the boys on the Hill are giving them credit for."

Senate Majority Leader Robert Dole of Kansas, the top Republican in Congress, has often said that he doubts Congress will finish action on the president's plan by the end of the year and that he finds little enthusiasm for the program.

Dole, appearing on the television talk show "Evans and Novak," on Sunday, said Capitol Hill Republicans will support the president's plan, "but a lot of people are sort of skeptical . . . support has gone sort of nose-dived."

Dole added that if the Senate gets the measure in timely fashion from the House, it might be possible for the Senate to pass a bill this year.

White was a crisp, difficult taskmaster

To children, E.B. White was the whimsical author of "Charlotte's Web," the story of a spider who saves a pig by making it a tourist attraction, and of "Stuart Little," a tale of a mouse born into a human family.

To readers of The New Yorker, he was the articulate voice of hundreds of columns stretching over many decades, perhaps America's best essayist of this century.

To writers everywhere, he set a standard for use of the language that few have equalled.

His little book, "Elements of Style," is on the desk of every serious writer in America, a constant reminder of English excellence.

White died this week in Brooklin, Maine, a rural community not unlike many small towns in Idaho. He was a man of the city, but he wrote eloquently of the country.

Simplify, simplify, simplify, said Thoreau in "Walden." White took the directive to heart in his writing and his life.

"Rich, ornate prose is hard to digest, generally unwholesome and sometimes nauseating," he admonished writers in "The Elements of Style." His stories had a vibrant simplicity, full of simple words and pared phrases. As a writer, he was a conservative economist.

White dabbled in newspaper reporting, but quickly found his home at The New Yorker as the only place which would publish what he called his "impertinences and irrelevancies."

He remained devoted to the publication all his career, and in its pages, found an outlet for such diverse interests as life in the country and censorship, nuclear war and the evils of totalitarianism.

But the art and craft of writing was always his first love. "Do not be afraid to seize whatever you have written and cut it to ribbons," he urged writers in a section on revising and rewriting prose. "It can always be restored to its original condition in the morning, if that course seems best."

For many, White's name doesn't come to mind when the great writers of America are listed. But his wise, little book probably has had as much influence on the general level of prose writing in magazines and newspapers.

To those of us who write, whose work it is to put ideas on paper, he was an inspiration, a model and a mentor. We shall miss him.

Farm measure will affect environment

Kenneth A. Cook

WASHINGTON — When the House takes up the farm bill this week, much more will be at stake than the matter of how many billions of dollars of subsidy to spend on agriculture over the next four years.

It's also an important environmental bill. At issue is whether our multibillion-dollar farm programs will continue to subsidize soil erosion and water pollution or will be used to help solve these problems.

According to a pioneering study released in May by the Conservation Foundation, soil sediment washed from farm fields causes $3 billion to $13 billion in damage each year by clogging navigation channels, water conveyances and treatment facilities, prematurely filling reservoirs and ruining recreational lakes and streams.

Erosion hurts farmers, too. If soil loss continues at the current pace, national crop yields could be reduced by an average of 10 percent over the next 50 years, according to some scientists.

Improper land use is at the heart of the problem. According to Agriculture Department surveys, farmers are planting corn, wheat, soybeans, cotton and other crops on about 53 million acres of land that is so susceptible to soil erosion that it should never have been cropped in the first place.

A farmer who plows a steep pasture or a tract of thin-soiled prairie may lose more soil to erosion in one year than nature can produce in a thousand. He may send soil, pesticides and fertilizers flowing into the Chesapeake Bay. Yet the federal government will subsidize those abuses with crop price supports, direct cash payments and other benefits.

The House will vote on a tough "sodbuster" policy designed to keep highly erodible land blanketed with grass and trees. Any farmer who plowed up highly erodible land to plant wheat, corn or other crops without an approved conservation plan would be ineligible for most Agriculture Department programs — including vital price supports — on any land he farmed. A companion measure, the so-called "swampbuster" policy, applies the same penalties to farmers who drain ecologically rich wetlands for crop production.

The principle behind both measures is simple: taxpayers will no longer subsidize such abuses of the land — especially at a time of mounting crop surpluses.

To help farmers deal with severe erosion problems on land already in production, both committees and the administration have approved a new "soil conservation reserve program." The bill before the House would offer farmers annual rental payments to take up to 25 million acres of the country's most erodible cropland out of production for 10 years and protect it with grass or trees.

The conservation reserve has broad political appeal because it would achieve two objectives at the same time. Since excessive soil erosion is highly concentrated on a fraction of the nation's 421 million acres of cropland, a 25-million-acre reserve could cut excessive cropland erosion by 30 percent within a few years. In addition, the estimated $1.2 billion in annual reserve payments would provide much-needed financial assistance to farmers and help reduce crop surpluses.

Environmental groups oppose any weakening of these reforms, and strongly support a crucial amendment by Reps. Dan Glickman, D-Kan., and Howard Wolpe, D-Mich. It sets a deadline of 1990 for farmers to enroll their erosion-prone cropland in the conservation reserve, retire it voluntarily or adopt a farming system that will bring soil loss into line. If they don't comply, they'll lose eligibility for price and income support payments and a host of other program benefits.

This amendment, in combination with the reserve program, is a firm but fair way to redress a classic inequity in farm programs. Because program benefits are directly related to the amount of land farmers plant to program crops, conservation-minded farmers have been penalized for keeping their erodible acres in grass or trees. After 1990, conservation compliance would handicap rather than reward farmers who abuse fragile soils in order to produce surplus crops.

Environmentalists aren't the only ones supporting such a policy. In a 1984 survey some 8,000 farmers from 17 states were asked whether farmers should be required to adopt recommended soil conservation practices in order to qualify for USDA price support programs. A clear majority said they should.

Unfortunately, experience shows that farmers — including family farmers — probably won't invest heavily in conservation when good times return. To the contrary, when crop prices and farm incomes soared in the 1970s, farmers plowed up millions of acres of fragile pasture and range, bulldozed and burned windbreaks and hedgerows, drained wetlands, abandoned terraces and soil-saving crop rotations and farmed right up to the streambank. Today farmers — and taxpayers — are suffering not only from the turnabout in the export market but also in part from those excesses.

Major environmental groups favor generous aid for agriculture. In return, though, it is perfectly reasonable to expect that farmers and farm policy makers will deal in earnest with soil erosion and other critical environmental problems, even if that means placing conditions that some farmers don't like on the programs to aid them.

Letters/ Vietnam veterans express opinion on fair booth controversy

Not there to make money

An open letter to Tom Shouse:

Mr. Shouse, I'll bet when you double check on the Air National Guard having a booth in the fair free, you had better check on some of the independent businesses you let in free too.

Sir, we have every intention of paying the $160 to you, but it's a bitter pill to swallow, when we find out, and we were told by these people, that others were let in for nothing.

Yes, Dan Hart, our president agreed to pay your people the $160, he discussed it with us.

Sir, I for one, fail to see where asking for signatures to request release of POWs and MIAs, is harrassment. You didn't see any of us standing and shouting, "Come sign our petition," similar to the way the carni barkers do to me, that's harrassment.

Mr. Shouse, you tell me how you came to the small-minded conclusion, "if you don't agree with the VVA, your un-American?" Sir, you have a right to your opinion, as do we. Does that mean we are un-American, because we disagree with you for showing favoritism to other groups?

You're right, Mr. Shouse, there are other veterans, and it wasn't a bed of roses for them.

Veterans from other wars were recognized. As a Viet Nam veteran, we came back to nothing. A government that wouldn't even recognize us for what we did, or the sacrifices we made for our country. A country that didn't and still don't give a damn.

It's people like you that aren't fair and above board, then try to lay it back on us, that it's all our fault, because we don't like the favoritism showed.

If one pays, everyone should pay. We weren't there to make money, and we didn't.

We were there for the comrades we left behind. And if you were one of them, that was left behind, I'll bet you wouldn't be sitting there bad mouthing us for what we are trying to do.

Mayor's remark not bright

We have all watched the path of a recent hurricane: Gloria, which traveled along the East Coast. I knew something of what the residents must of felt for I lived in Kansas, a tornado country. Often we took to our cave beside the house where we kept staples and a kerosene lantern. After the storm, we came out to see the terrible havoc wrought by the storm — and gave thanks that our house was not hit full force.

Did you all hear the mayor of New York City make the remark, "We scared the hell out of the hurricane?" He was evidently trying to say something clever, and ended up saying something very stupid! Of course, mere man has nothing to do with where or when a hurricane will strike, or the damage it may cause. The mayor of New York would have been considered much wiser had he given thanks that not more damage was done. I wonder how many of the people in his state considered him clever or just plain ignorant and stupid?

He purchased smart truck

Last year I purchased a brand new little Ford Ranger truck from a well known automobile dealer in Twin Falls. Since then I have had it back to him three times for timing, which his mechanics cannot seem to correct. But all-in-all, I cannot complain too much.

In fact, I must praise my little truck for it has qualities I never dreamed of, such as: (1) When I pull out from a side street or driveway, it goes without slowing any on coming traffic. (2) It has two headlights perfectly set at the right angles and two tail/stop lights all of which can easily and inexpensively be replaced if one burns out. I might add that the two tail/stop lights come with red plastic coverings which also can be replaced easily if broken. (3) Smart truck too, it knows where it is going, how to get there, and how fast to go according to speed limit, traffic, and road conditions. (4) The directional lights. When I want to turn left or right and turn them on, 100 feet before I turn, they start flashing immediately without a delayed action of finally working at point of turning.

And not only that, those little son of a guns turn of [all] by themselves after I have completed my turn.

The marvels I got in this truck. Maybe I bought an experimental. I just wish Ford and all the other automobile manufacturers would add these features to their vehicles.

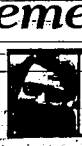
Textbooks emerging from Sargasso Sea of blandness



Charles Levendosky

For the past decade, textbook companies have been scuttling America's public school education by watering down school texts, so they won't offend any special interest group.

Fortunately, we may have reached rock bottom, at last. A few state boards and state departments of education are now trying to raise textbooks from the Sargasso Sea of blandness they've sunken into and are asking publishers to pump information and content back in.

If the efforts of these educators are successful, it will be a victory for every school child in America. And it will be a considerable victory for those who believe in excellence in education.

The California State Department of Education has taken a dramatic lead in textbook reform by rejecting 30 junior high biology textbooks printed by a dozen publishers. The biology books were rejected primarily for not having sufficient emphasis in evolution. The books were rejected for what was not in them — for their lack of content and their lack of depth. Lack of content, that's what the critics of textbook publishers have been calling "dumbing down" textbooks.

Other reasons for rejecting these biology books, according to Susan Lange, director of public relations for California's Superintendent of Public Instruction Bill Honig, were insufficient treatment of controversial issues like nuclear energy, pollution, and toxic waste. Get the picture? In textbooks, apparently, controversy doesn't sell. Textbook companies seem to publish by the rule of thumb: When in doubt, leave it out.

Last December, the Virginia State Department of Education adopted a new high school literature series. A parent called a member of the state board of education and asked, "Do you know what they have done to Shakespeare?"

The board member who received the call is Margaret S. Marston, the chairman of the Curriculum and Instruction Committee for the Virginia State Board of Education. Marston also served on the National Commission on Excellence in Education.

"Do you know what they have done to Shakespeare? They've expurgated 404 lines from Romeo and Juliet and 360 lines from Hamlet." That parent knew his Shakespeare and he knew who to call. "Are there no ethical standards in textbook publishing?" Marston asked in frustration.

The board acted quickly and last July textbook publishers were attending a conference to answer the challenges of state educators about the dumbing down of books. We let them know," said Marston, "that Virginia will no longer accept watered down texts."

The problems, as she sees them, fall into three main categories: expurgation of a standard literary text without informing the reader, dumbing down texts, and "mentioning." Marston explains that "mentioning" means that "14 issues are mentioned on one page, but not one is covered in depth."

One of the culprits in the dumbing down process is the readability formula — certain words are not supposed to be understood by students of particular ages; therefore they shouldn't be used in the texts.

The readability formula has led to a few amusing, if sad, publishing fiascos. Grimms fairytale, The Shoe-Maker and the Elves, was printed in a version for first graders but did not mention the words "shoe," "shoemaker," and "elf." Apparently because the readability formula maintains that first graders can't understand these concepts.

Last year Terry Bartholomew, a parent in Fairfax County, Va., brought it to the attention of the Richmond Times-Dispatch that his seventh grade daughter's history textbook, American Adventures published by Scholastic Book Services substituted an ellipsis for the word "unalienable" in The Declaration of Independence. It read, "We hold these truths to be self-evident: that all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain . . . rights, that among these are life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness." The "vocabulary is too difficult for seventh graders." Later editions retain the word "unalienable."

When we have come to watering down The Declaration of Independence, then some of us hope we have sunk to the bottom, at last, and can push up off the muck, struggle to the surface, and gasp for the breath of knowledge.

MPG standards lowered for '86

WASHINGTON (AP) — The government relaxed its fuel economy requirements for 1986 model cars Tuesday, saying it would have been impossible for the nation's two largest automakers to meet the original standards laid out by Congress.

The National Highway Traffic Safety Administration said automakers' 1986 passenger fleets must average 26 miles per gallon, rather than the originally mandated standard of 27.5 mpg. The ruling made final NHTSA's tentative decision in July to ease overall mileage standards for passenger cars in the new model year.

The decision was instantly praised by Ford Motor Co. and General Motors Corp., which risked millions of dollars in fines for failing to meet the higher mileage standard and petitioned NHTSA to roll back the requirements.

Chrysler Corp., which says it spent $300 million developing a fuel efficient auto fleet that would meet the original government standards, has consistently opposed efforts to lower the standard. It had no immediate comment on NHTSA's ruling.

Postage rate subsidy extended

WASHINGTON (AP) — Preferred postage rates for church bulletins, library mail, charitable appeals and newspapers delivered in the county where they are published will remain unchanged for the next seven weeks, the Postal Service Board of Governors ruled Tuesday.

The board rescinded, at least until Nov. 17, a 23 percent to 41 percent increase in the rates, which are kept low because they are subsidized by tax dollars.

Postponement was made possible when President Reagan signed legislation extending the subsidy until the middle of November.

Import of Krugerrands banned

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan on Tuesday banned the importation of Krugerrands, effective Oct. 11, putting into place a key element of the administration's program of limited economic sanctions designed to move South Africa away from its system of racial segregation.

The president acted in an executive order issued as a follow-up to sanctions imposed on Sept. 9, which he said were designed to deal with an "unusual and extraordinary" emergency in South Africa. That nation is in the grip of turmoil over the racial separation policy, apartheid.

Reagan said he acted "in view of the continuing nature of that emergency."

Hussein lobbies for arms sale

WASHINGTON (AP) — King Hussein of Jordan lobbied a reluctant Congress on Tuesday to approve the Reagan administration's proposed $1.5 billion arms sale for his country.

But even as the king pressed his case in separate meetings in the House and Senate, opponents said they would go ahead with legislation designed to block the sale unless Hussein alters his position on key issues in the Middle East peace process.

Hussein's comments to lawmakers were off-limits to reporters, and in his public comments, he condemned Israel's bombing of Palestine Liberation Organization headquarters earlier in the day in Tunisia.

Synanon members indicted

WASHINGTON (AP) — A federal grand jury on Tuesday indicted nine present and former officials and residents of the Synanon Foundation for conspiring to obstruct justice.

The Justice Department said the 22-count indictment was returned in U.S. District Court here.

It charged that a "conspiracy to obstruct justice" was directed at an Internal Revenue Service audit into the tax-exempt status of the Synanon Foundation, Inc., later known as the Synanon Church, a drug rehabilitation and alcohol counseling organization located in Badger, Calif.

Lord supported for China post

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate Foreign Relations Committee voted 12-1 on Tuesday to recommend the confirmation of Winston Lord as U.S. ambassador to China.

Lord, 48, president of the Council on Foreign Relations, is a former diplomat who also was a key aide to Henry A. Kissinger during the Nixon administration.

The committee vote on the nomination was held up for several weeks at the request of Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., who questioned Lord at a specially called hearing on Monday and voted against the appointment.

Reagan opposes cigarette tax

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan still opposes the 16 cent tax on a package of cigarettes even though he signed legislation extending the tax at that rate until mid-November, the White House said Tuesday.

Spokesman Larry Speakes said Reagan decided shortly before midnight Monday to approve the extension, despite his long-standing opposition to higher taxes. The tax would have been slashed to eight cents, at least temporarily, beginning Tuesday if Reagan had not signed the bill.

The measure extends the higher tax for 45 days to give Congress time to decide whether to continue it on a more permanent basis. Speakes said Reagan will reserve judgment on the final congressional bill until he gets it.

Dollar dips to 17-month low

NEW YORK (AP) — The dollar staged a sharp retreat Tuesday's trading, falling to its lowest level in 17½ months against the currencies of its major trading partners.

The dollar's slide in American foreign exchange markets was attributed to renewed fears of further central bank intervention against the U.S. currency.

The Federal Reserve Board said its index of the dollar's value against the currencies of 10 other industrial nations dropped 1.56 percent Tuesday to its lowest level since April 16, 1984.

Rajneesh vows to stay in state

RAJNEESHPURAM, Ore. (AP) — After burning 5,000 copies of the "Book of Rajneeshism" and renouncing all religious trappings, Bhagwan Shree Rajneesh vowed to remain forever in this central Oregon commune as "an ordinary human being with a little difference."

The 53-year-old Indian guru has blamed his deposed personal secretary, Ma Anand Sheela, for turning his teachings into a religion while he was in a 3½-year period of silence.

"I'm not a messenger, I'm not a prophet," Rajneesh said at a news conference Monday night following the ritual burning of 5,000 copies of the "Book of Rajneeshism" and Sheela's red robes.

The only difference between himself and others, Rajneesh said, is that "you are asleep. I am awake."

Iowa declares economic emergency

DES MOINES, Iowa (AP) — Gov. Terry Branstad on Tuesday declared an "economic emergency" in Iowa, triggering a law that enables troubled farmers to seek a one-year reprieve from foreclosures.

Under the moratorium, individual farmers who can stay current with interest payments but cannot come up with the principal may ask district judges to grant a one-year moratorium on their foreclosures. The law does not guarantee that any moratoriums would be granted.

Branstad, a Republican who headed President Reagan's Iowa campaign last year, had previously indicated he would declare the emergency, saying it would send a strong signal to federal policymakers about the severity of the farm credit crunch.

The governor, who has been mulling over the declaration all summer, has blamed farm problems on Reagan's policies.

"My action today is designed to tell Washington, in a loud and clear voice: 'We need help in the Heartland,'" Branstad said at a news conference Tuesday afternoon. "This is a significant and drastic step that I'm taking as the chief executive of the leading agricultural state in America."

The Legislature this year rewrote Iowa's Depression-era moratorium law, going along with Branstad's request that it apply only to farmers who could at least make their interest payments.

Declaring the economic emergency automatically puts the law into effect.

Last month, Branstad ordered a 3.85 percent across-the-board cut in the state budget due to poor revenues from the agriculture-dominated state economy.

For about a month, farm activists have protested daily outside Branstad's office in support of the moratorium. But bankers have said it could hurt farmers by making credit scarce.

There had been speculation Branstad would declare the emergency this week, because Congress is debating a new farm bill.

Iowa State Banking Superintendent Thomas Huston said it is unlikely a moratorium is the answer to the decline of the family farm in Iowa.

U.S. copter attacked

WASHINGTON (AP) — A U.S. Army helicopter flying a routine surveillance mission along the West German border was attacked without provocation over the weekend by a Czechoslovakian jet fighter, the Pentagon disclosed Tuesday.

The jet, described as a high-performance L-39 fighter, fired two to four rockets at the helicopter but failed to hit it and then flew back across the border to Czechoslovakia, north of the German city of Freyung, near the village of Finsterau, in airspace about one mile inside West Germany.

The United States filed a strong protest over the incident on Monday, Sims said. He declined to answer questions about whether the Czech government had responded to the protest or offered an explanation for the attack.

The State Department also refused to discuss the protest.

The incident occurred Saturday at 1 p.m. local time, or 5 a.m. MDT, said Pentagon spokesman Robert B. Sims. The American helicopter was carrying two crewmen, neither of whom was injured.

Before the drovers of bygone years herded their geese 50 miles to London from Tremadoc, Wales, they shod those geese. Walked them through pools of warm pitch, then trimmed each balled-up foot into the shape of a goose's shoe.

Mountaineer gave life to save another

AP Laserphoto

Paul Marcus Johnson says he will no longer climb mountains.

SEATTLE (AP) — A Seattle mountaineer sacrificed his life to help another climber stay warm during a killer blizzard that left three men dead near Grand Teton peak in Wyoming, the mountaineer's friend said.

Paul Marcus Johnson, who survived the storm with frostbite, cracked fingers and the loss of 16 pounds, said he and Ken Webb met three young alpinists from Wyoming during an emergency descent of the Grand Teton on Sept. 11.

The men carried neither food nor water, and were unprepared for the cold weather. One wore sneakers.

"We realized the Wyoming climbers weren't going to survive without some kind of protection," Johnson recalled. "We divided everything five ways — the water, the food. Rather than see (one of them) die that first night, Ken said he wasn't cold and gave up his expedition-weight polypro underwear. That's the kind of man he was."

Johnson, 40, a University of Washington biochemist, was one of two climbers who survived the 1½-day ordeal of gale-force winds, snowfall and chill factors well below zero when the two-man Seattle party and the three-man Jackson, Wyo., party were trapped above 12,000 feet on the 13,766-foot peak.

The other survivor was Greg Findley, 21, of Jackson. Park rangers rescued Findley and Johnson early the morning of Sept. 13.

Webb and the other climbers died in the storm.

Grand Teton, one of America's most popular alpine summits, can be lashed by sudden sleet or rain storms almost any time of the year, except during a brief part of the summer.

"You cannot forget the weather, ever," Johnson said. "It can snow in July. No matter how pretty the rock is, it can turn on you. It can go from being a place of heaven to a place of hell."

Johnson, of Issaquah, said he believed his friend could have survived the storm if the Wyoming climbers had been properly equipped for the journey.

"I question why he's gone. Maybe he's not here because he was a better Christian than me. Maybe I'm here because I wasn't so willing to share. That extra insulation would have bought him the difference."

Johnson was released recently from St. John's Hospital in Jackson, suffering from severe frostbite to his fingers and feet. His fiancee, Linda Dahn of Issaquah, who had flown to Wyoming after she heard of his rescue by National Park Service rangers, drove him back to Seattle, arriving in time to attend Webb's memorial service.

Johnson said he has abandoned the sport he and his best friend enjoyed for 15 years together.

"I don't know how I could enjoy climbing with anybody else. I mean, after 15 years, you've worked out all the bugs. Linda's only experience with my climbing was to see me come home injured and my best friend dead. I couldn't put her through that again."

Airline offering clear look at comet

LONDON (AP) — British Airways is offering a sky-high seat for the great Halley's Comet show.

For the equivalent of $42, the state-owned airline is promising to take passengers on an hour-long trip over the ocean at 35,000 feet on a moonless night — well above most atmospheric pollution and away from the glare of city lights. The flights, in December and January, will operate from Manchester Airport.

"They will probably provide the comet on its nearest approach to the earth," an airline statement said.

E.B. White, editor, essayist and writer, dies at age 86

E.B. WHITE
Master of simple writing

BROOKLIN, Maine (AP) — E.B. White, the graceful essayist of the New Yorker magazine's brilliant beginnings, died Tuesday at age 86.

He left behind timeless works of humor, literary good sense and whimsy, including the beloved children's book, "Charlotte's Web."

White, who had suffered from Alzheimer's disease and had declined steadily in the last year, died at his home, according to the Jordan Funeral Home in Ellsworth. The family said plans for a memorial service would be announced.

"A few months ago, he said he had so much to tell and so little time to tell it," said J. Russell Wiggins, publisher of the weekly Ellsworth American and a friend of White since the late 1940s.

The feeling had been with White nearly all his life. "I liked to write," he once said, "and there seemed to be plenty to write about."

White was a private man who fled New York for a sheep farmer's life in Maine nearly a half-century ago; a precise writer with a Yankee's horror of the unnecessary word.

Though not part of the New Yorker's original cast, White was at length recruited, married one of the chief editors and set the bemused, detached tone of the magazine's "Talk of the Town" column.

"It is not too much to say that Andy White was the most valuable person on the magazine," his friend and colleague James Thurber wrote in 1938. "His delicate tinkering with the works of the New Yorker caused it to move with a new ease and grace."

He was born Elwyn Brooks White on July 11, 1899, in Mount Vernon, N.Y. "Being the youngest in a large family (six children), I was usually in a crowd but often felt lonely and removed," he has said. "I took to writing early, to assuage my uneasiness and collect my thoughts, and I was a busy writer long before I went into long pants."

In 1917, he enrolled in Cornell University, where every student named White inevitably became "Andy," in honor of Andrew White, the school's first president. "Andy" he remained, grateful to shed a given name he disliked.

After Army service in 1918 and graduation in 1921, White crossed the country in a Model T Ford roadster with a friend, worked for the Seattle Times and then aboard an Arctic freighter, and returned to New York to work for an advertising agency in 1923.

The New Yorker appeared in February, 1925. White was drawn to the magazine, he recalled, "not because it had any great merit but because the items were short, relaxed and sometimes funny. I was a 'short' writer, and I lost no time in submitting squibs and poems."

Harold Ross, the New Yorker's founder, wooed White for two years before the young writer agreed to work, but only half-time.

Little by little, it became a full-time job. In 1929, White married Katharine Angell, one of the New Yorker's first editors and Ross' strong right arm.

"Ross fumed, fussed, broke down partitions, changed the format every issue, strove and strove, cursed and raged," White recalled. "It was chaos, but it was enjoyable. I dropped the name James Thurber, and Ross hired him immediately. I hire anybody," he remarked, gloomily.

Ever the bashful soul, White was permanently "out" to visitors.

"White's customary practice in those days, if he couldn't place a caller's name, was to slip moodily out of the building by way of the fire escape and hide in the coolness of Schrafft's until the visitor went away," Thurber wrote.

"His life is his own. He is the only writer of prominence I know of who could walk through the Algonquin lobby or between the tables at Jack and Charlie's and be recognized only by his friends."

It was White who recognized the brilliance of the spare drawings with which Thurber littered the floor, and he prevailed on Ross to print them.

It was White who captioned Carl Rose's cartoon of an angry little girl at dinner — "I say it's spinach, and I say the hell with it."

In 1937, White parted with the magazine and its city, moving to a white clapboard farmhouse in North Brooklin and writing a column, "One Man's Meat," for Harper's magazine until 1943. In 1945 he was again writing for the New Yorker.

A spartan, gray boathouse on the shore of Allen Cove became his studio, and he devoted happy hours to raising North Country Cheviot sheep and his flocks of geese and poultry.

White's first books appeared in 1929: "The Lady is Cold," a collection of poems, and "Is Sex Necessary?" with Thurber, a satire of ponderous studies of the mating urge.

White and his wife, who died in 1977, co-edited "A Sub Treasury of American Humor" in 1941. They had a son, Joel, and Mrs. White had two children by a previous marriage, Nancy Stableford and Roger Angell, now a New Yorker writer.

In 1964, White was awarded the Presidential Medal of Freedom, and in 1971 received the Medal for Literature of the National Book Committee.

"Stuart Little," a 1945 book about a mouse, was the first of his children's books. "Charlotte's Web," about a runty pig's friendship with a philosophical spider, followed in 1952.

Everything White had to say about writing fit into the 85 pages of "The Elements of Style," his revision of a writing text by William Strunk Jr., his teacher at Cornell.

"The rules were as simple to state — 'Omit needless words' — as they were difficult to obey.

"I have been trying to omit needless words since 1919," White wrote in the revised version, "although there are still many words that cry for omission and the huge task will never be accomplished."

For many years, his chief hobby was sailing, usually in a 19-foot centerboard sloop named Martha, built for him by his son, a naval architect.

White often brooded on the shape of the world but remained an optimist.

"As long as there is one upright man, as long as there is one compassionate woman, the contagion may spread and the scene is not desolate," he wrote to one of his many correspondents in 1973. "Hope is the thing that is left to us, in a bad time. I shall get up Sunday morning and wind the clock, as a contribution to order and steadfastness."

Indian's suicide 9th in few weeks

RIVERTON, Wyo. (AP) — For the ninth time in less than two months, a young Indian male on the Wind River Reservation in central Wyoming has committed suicide, officials said Tuesday.

"A 25-year-old Arapahoe man hanged himself overnight in a closet, using a drawstring from his sweatshirt, and was found Tuesday morning by his sister, Fremont County Coroner Larry Lee said.

The first suicide occurred Aug. 12. The victims range in age from 14 to 25. Eight were Arapahoe Indians and one was a Shoshone.

"It's just a domino effect, it seems like," Lee said.

The coroner said he had heard suggestions the suicides might be the result of some sort of cult, but that he saw no evidence to substantiate that.

Lee said that, to his knowledge, only two of the victims left notes and neither gave an explanation for the suicide. The notes simply said the person was sorry for what he was doing or told relatives how to divide up his property, Lee said.

The name of the latest victim was being withheld until several relatives could be notified.

Since the beginning of the year, at least 48 suicide attempts have been reported on the sparsely populated, 2 million acre reservation, compared to less than 30 last year.

Unemployment among the reservation's 6,000 Indians is nearly 80 percent.

At least four of the suicides occurred while the young men were under the influence of alcohol. Studies have found 51 percent of the students have a drinking problem and 47 percent have tried drugs.

The Rev. Tony Short, a Jesuit priest at St. Stephens Mission, says the suicides and alcohol abuse are symptoms of a larger mental health problem the Indians will have to conquer themselves, with a change in attitude.

Israeli planes bomb PLO headquarters

HAMAM PLAGE, Tunisia (AP) — Streaking 1,500 miles across the Mediterranean Sea, Israeli warplanes bombed Palestine Liberation Organization headquarters in a Tunis suburb Tuesday.

The PLO said as many as 60 people were killed.

The jets swept low over the coast to strike Yasser Arafat's headquarters only 12 miles south of the Tunisian capital. Although Arafat escaped the devastating attack, the Israeli bombs destroyed his political headquarters, his residence and the homes of several PLO officials.

Dressed in military fatigues and appearing distressed, Arafat and an aide inspected the damage and talked with the wounded. Arafat has made his main headquarters in Tunisia since he was driven out of Beirut by the Israelis in 1982.

In Tel Aviv, Defense Minister Yitzhak Rabin told a briefing the raid was to retaliate for the Yom Kippur slayings of three Israelis aboard a yacht in Cyprus. And he called it a warning to terrorists "that the long arm of the IDF (Israel Defense Forces) will reach them wherever they are."

Although a caller claiming to represent the PLO group "Force 17" claimed responsibility for the attack in Cyprus, the PLO has denied involvement.

Israeli officials would not say how many or what kind of planes were involved in the raid, but Israeli military sources said the aircraft were refueled over the Mediterranean during their 5,000-mile mission.

Witnesses in Hamam Plage said they saw four jets conduct bombing runs. One PLO spokesman said six Phantom jets were involved while another PLO spokesman mentioned eight jets. The Israeli arsenal contains Phantom jets, but also more modern F-16 and F-15 warplanes.

The only target missed in the raid was the PLO's communications center, but there was a large bomb crater nearby.

Lt. Gen. Moshe Levy, Israel's chief of staff, told a briefing in Tel Aviv that as many as 50 people were killed in Tuesday's raid. Medical sources in Tunis put the death toll at about 30 and said about 100 were injured.

Israel has bombed guerrilla bases in neighboring Lebanon 13 times this year, but it was the first time Israel has struck any other country since June 7, 1981, when Israeli warplanes bombed an Iraqi nuclear reactor near Baghdad. Israel also mounted the airborne mission in 1976 and rescued hostages held at Entebbe airport in Uganda.

Tuesday's raid provoked expressions of anger from other Arab countries and Tunisia called for action by the U.N. Security Council.

In Washington, the Reagan administration suggested it considered the raid an act of self-defense.

State Department spokesman Charles E. Redman said, "As a matter of principle, it is our view that it is legitimate self defense to respond appropriately to acts of terrorism."

Gorbachev serious on summit

MOSCOW (AP) — Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev said Tuesday he wants more from the U.S.-Soviet summit than to "smile pleasantly" for television cameras and shake President Reagan's hand.

He made clear that halting the American space-based defense program remains a top Kremlin priority.

Gorbachev, 54, spoke on the eve of his summit with President Francois Mitterrand of France, in his first interview with Western television. He said U.S. news agencies already had reported the "main" elements of the Soviet Union's new proposal at the Geneva arms control talks, but declined to confirm specific points.

The interview with three French TV reporters, along with a prerecorded statement he read, was broadcast by the main Soviet national channel and on French television.

Turning to human rights, the reporters asked Gorbachev why there had been no change in the Soviet stand on emigration and dissidents. They mentioned physicist and human rights activist Andrei Sakharov, who has been banished to the closed city of Gorky, and Anatoly Shcharansky, who was sent to prison on espionage charges.

His response followed conventional Soviet statements on the issue.

"I could put it as follows," the Kremlin leader said, "Let us in the Soviet Union manage our affairs ourselves and you in France manage yours. But I will nevertheless answer your question."

AIDS blocked by hormones

TEL AVIV, Israel (AP) — An Israeli scientist claimed Tuesday to have developed a new treatment for AIDS which partly stopped spread of the fatal disease in a 12-year-old boy.

Professor Natan Trainin, a biologist at the Weizmann Institute of Science, said the unidentified boy was treated with hormones from the thymus of calves. The treatment boosts the body's natural immunities against Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome, a virus that weakens and attacks its victims' immune systems.

"At this stage it is difficult to evaluate the contribution of this material," said the boy's doctor, Rina Zeitzov, in an interview with the daily Maariv newspaper. "But it is a fact that with its help there has been an improvement in the immune condition of the boy and the disease was at least partly halted."

Various other drugs have been used to try to boost the immune systems of AIDS victims, including interleukin-2, which is being investigated by Dr. Anthony Fauci of the National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases in Bethesda, Md.

Rupert mayor calls for state legislative help

By BONNIE BAIRD JONES
Times-News writer

RUPERT — The liability insurance crisis for Idaho governmental agencies has prompted a letter from Rupert Mayor Bill Whittom to Gov. John Evans asking for a special legislative session to reinstate a former governmental immunity rule.

Whittom said he sent a lengthy letter to the governor's office Tuesday and telephoned to advise it was on its way.

Although Home Insurance Co., of New York, agreed late Monday to extend liability coverage through Dec. 31 to Rupert and about other 70 governmental customers it has in Idaho, Whittom said this is only a temporary relief.

"It is not a solution to the problem," Whittom said. "In reinstating coverage the end of the year, we are forced to give the insurance company a 'blank check' to fill in what they want to charge us for the coverage," Whittom said. "We need to protect our taxpayers from excessive insurance costs."

Whittom explained Tuesday that, until 1970, Idaho had a "rule of sovereign immunity," limiting damage claims against governmental agencies. In 1971 the state Legislature approved a tort claims act covering wrongful doings by governmental agencies or their employees. This set maximum payment for such claims at $100,000 per person and $300,000 per occurrence. This was later increased to $500,000 per occurrence, but limits are currently increased under federal rulings to allow payment of up to the maximum of coverage held by the agency involved, Whittom said.

In addition to the letter to Evans, Whittom said, he is sending copies to Idaho congressional delegates, asking that state and federal lawmakers get together to coordinate a reasonable limitation on what a governmental agency must pay in the event of tort claims. He said he has had some favorable response from other cities and political leaders in the area.

"We need protection from the U.S. government and the state Legislature to limit tort claims, especially in the cases of employment discrimination and civil rights," Whittom said.

"We also need protection in the event of claims of wrongful acts by our employees and agencies while out of our own state," he added. "For example a city employee traveling on business into another state could become involved in an accident resulting in a suit for the maximum coverage of agencies in that state. This amount could be well beyond Idaho's required coverage. We feel the federal government needs to step in and correct this situation."

Under the 1-percent-tax-initiative adopted several years ago to protect Idaho residents against confiscation of their property through excessive taxation, Whittom said, taxing agencies were allowed only a maximum of 5 percent spending increases each year. Because most agencies could not meet increasing insurance costs under this limitation, tort insurance exemptions were granted, Whittom said.

He said, in the letter to the governor and congressional delegates, that he and fellow Rupert city government officials feel it is time for Congress and Idaho legislators to acknowledge there have to be reasonable limits [illegible] and streets," he added.

persons who are victims of wrongful acts or omissions by local governments and their employees.

"We do not recommend depriving victims of their rights, but want to protect financial integrity of the governmental units and to protect taxpayers from confiscation of their property by excessive taxation," the letter states.

Whittom said that until he learned late Monday that Home Insurance Co. had granted a temporary coverage extention, he had requested all Rupert employees to drive vehicles only if absolutely necessary.

"They would have been breaking the state law by driving without insurance. It involved in an accident, government employees would be violating the law just as if you or I were to drive uninsured vehicles on public roads

Canopy proposed to BID

By ANNETTE CARY

TWIN FALLS — Twin Falls Mayor Emery Petersen is proposing that downtown merchants take on a new project: covering the central three blocks of Main Avenue with a giant, see-through canopy.

Earl Faulkner, chairman of the Business Improvement District, said Tuesday afternoon that the idea had merit, but he declined to comment further until he had more information. Petersen had made the suggestion only hours before at a BID meeting held Tuesday morning.

Petersen said other cities have constructed dome-shaped, free-standing coverings over their downtowns to shelter shoppers year-round from rain and snow.

If engineering studies are done this winter, the covering could be built this summer to compete with the opening of the Magic Valley Mall, now under construction, he said.

BID coordinator Chris Valence said the covering could be "the greatest thing to ever happen to downtown." The covering would keep snow off sidewalks, while keeping the trees and fresh air of the downtown to provide an outdoor atmosphere, she said.

No cost estimates are available yet for the project. But Petersen is proposing that downtown businesses pay for the covering with taxes raised through a Local Improvement District. LIDs impose a tax on only the property owners that benefit by special projects.

The time is right, he said.

For the first time in 15 years, no downtown businesses are being tax-

Bank plan will benefit school funds

By BOB FREUND
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — In the next two years, some Twin Falls County schools may be equipping playgrounds, computer labs and libraries because a bank customer took out an auto loan.

Curtis H. Eaton, president of Twin Falls Bank & Trust Co., announced Tuesday the bank will donate part of its income from new loans and credit cards to the county's seven major school districts for projects that benefit students.

The program, which is called "The Lending Hand-Investing in the Future," is pledging 1 percent of the interest from each new consumer loan placed on the bank's books during the next three months. It also will give $5 from the annual service fee on each new VISA credit card account opened before January 1, said Lance Clow, vice president of marketing.

The schools will receive direct donations from the bank in two installments — one on Jan. 1, 1986 and one on Jan. 1, 1987, he said.

The Lending Hand campaign is designed to draw attention both to the bank and to an important community need, he said.

"This is interest that we would have earned during the normal course of business," he said.

It is not possible to forecast the amount of money each district might yield from the bank's new program. But the amounts could range to $1,000 or more. The more volume that comes into the bank, the more money the districts will get, Clow said.

"It would be nice if we could increase loan volume and pass along the benefit of that increase," he said.

Involved in the program are two types of common bank transactions — consumer loans which include home improvement loans, personal loans, auto loans and others — but not residential real estate loans — and annual fees charged to customers for using VISA credit cards issued by Twin Falls Bank & Trust.

School districts will be given essentially equal donations, which will help some of the county's smaller systems, Clow said.

While making the direct contributions, the bank also wants to draw attention to an income tax credit offered by the state for donations to schools, Eaton said.

Individual taxpayers can receive as much as $50 credit on their returns for donations to any qualified Idaho school, public or private.

Each school district will make the final decision on how to spend the money, as long as it is not used to cover routine budget items.

Eaton said the money must be used for the direct benefit of students and for such items as playground and band equipment, computers, uniforms, score boards and library books.

Fireman 1st safety graduate

By BONNIE BAIRD JONES
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — The first public safety officer to graduate from the Police Officers Standards Training program in Boise is Twin Falls fireman Bill Hanchey, who completed the 310-hour training session ranking fourth in the class of 25 officers.

Twin Falls Public Safety Director Tim Qualls said Twin Falls is the only city in Idaho with a public safety department in which fire and police services are combined and personnel encouraged to train for double duty in law enforcement and fire fighting. The system is designed to give additional manpower to the two departments at a minimum cost to the city.

Qualls said he was advised by the POST academy that Hanchey, 32, graduated with a 93.91 score out of a possible 100 and a grade of "A" for the course. His records show he passed the weekly exams with an average of 94.99 of a possible 100 points and that he scored a 100 on both the first aid and diving examinations. His notebook grade was 98 and his final exam was 180 of a possible 200 points. He also scored well in all other areas of the training and testing, Qualls said.

"I'm damned proud of him — not just for his high grades, but for the way he conducted himself during class work," Qualls said. "This should show those who said a man can't learn to do two jobs at a time that they are wrong and that the public safety officers program is working very well."

Local contractor donates painting of fair buildings

By PAT MARCANTONIO
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Thanks to a Twin Falls paint contractor, buildings at the Twin Falls County Fairgrounds are getting a new coat of paint.

Max Stuart volunteered some of his staff to paint 20 buildings, said Emmett Harrison, a member of the county Fair Board. Stuart's contribution equaled $6,000 in labor.

Stuart said Harrison had told him the county had a limited amount of money for the job.

"He knew I had a good-sized business and I could get the job done. It's as simple as that," added Stuart, who's been in business in Twin Falls for 40 years.

Harrison said a work crew last week sandblasted the old paint off the buildings. Painting began on Merchants Building No. 4 and the Produce Building until winds halted the work last week.

Tuesday, four painters — including Stuart — began painting the Antique Building, Harrison said.

The availability of paint wasn't a problem. During the fair last month about $13,000 was pledged to buy paint for the fair buildings. Harrison had organized the fund-raising drive because he said there was no money to do the job in the fair budget. He turned to Stuart, a friend of his, for help.

"I can't tell you how pleased I am really to get a professional to do this type of work," Harrison said.

He hopes the painting will be completed by the spring. Although the painting has just begun, Harrison added, "It's really going to be beautiful."

Before the fair, the Buhl Preceptor Chapter of Beta Sigma Phi painted the Home Arts Building. Offers to paint other buildings also were made by other service organizations.

Spokane banks first to merge

By The Associated Press and the Times-News

SPOKANE — Faced with severe financial problems, the Farm Credit Banks of Spokane today became the first regional system in the nation to merge its production credit associations and federal land bank associations into district-wide units.

Approval of the PCA merger by the system's 15,000 stockholders was a condition imposed by the nation's 37 farm credit banks for extending long-term financing to the Spokane banks, which have suffered severe loan losses for several years. Spokane Farm Credit Banks officials also sought approval of the FLBA merger by its 33,000 shareholders.

Farmers, ranchers, commercial fishermen and lumbermen endorsed the plan overwhelmingly in an August election.

As a result of the vote, the 40 FLBAs in the 12 Farm Credit District Tuesday were combined into the Federal Land Bank Association of Spokane, and 21 PCAs in the district were merged into the Interstate Production Credit Association, also based in Spokane.

One PCA, the Eastern Idaho PCA of Pocatello, refused to approve the merger and is operating separately. It lends to farmers and ranchers in a 22-county area of eastern Idaho and western Wyoming.

The 12th Farm Credit District operates offices in five Northwest states — Idaho, Washington, Oregon, Montana and Alaska.

Although merged into two organizations at the regional level, the individual PCA and FLBA offices will operate together locally in a series of one-stop farm credit service centers, according to Tim Kerns, Interstate PCA board chairman.

"This consolidation will help provide the efficiencies we need to offer the lowest possible rate to our borrowers," Kerns said.

"We believe reorganization into the strongest, most efficient structure possible is essential to position ourselves to deal with the continued stress in agriculture," said FLBA Board Chairman Richard Polatis.

The PCAs, which provide short-term operating loans, and the FLBAs, which handle long-term real estate loans, are federally chartered, privately owned lending institutions. Their loan portfolios in the Northwest total more than $4.4 billion.

The reorganization follows liquidation of eight PCAs, which suffered $70 million in losses during 1983 and 1984 and nearly forced the parent Federal Intermediate Credit Bank of Spokane into bankruptcy.

Under a $136 million financing agreement, the nation's farm credit banks bought high-risk and non-performing loans from the Spokane FICB. The bailout has placed the Farm Credit Banks of Spokane back in a solvent position, officials there have said.

Liquor sales surge before tax hike

By BOB FREUND
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — The tax man cometh, but thousands of barkeeps and buyers beateth him in a weeklong rush for their favorite bottles.

State liquor stores were some of the busiest shops in Idaho Monday as business owners and individual consumers rushed to avoid an Oct. 1 hike in federal excise taxes on hard liquor.

Tuesday, the federal tax on a gallon of 100-proof liquor rose $12.50 a gallon, a $2 boost. The increase was enough to add 70 cents to a fifth of 86-proof vodka. The new taxes do not affect wine or beer.

The increases were enough to trigger a last-minute run to the sales counters, said Jim Baugh, assistant superintendent for the Idaho Liquor Dispensary.

"Yesterday was a tremendous day," he said. Stores across the state took in $580,000 in sales, about five times the normal $110,000 to $120,000.

"It looks like the month of September is up about $1.2 million over last year. We should hit about $4 million this month," Baugh said. That puts September sales in the same league as the pre-holiday shopping season that dents the shelves every December.

But there were some stunning receipts at individual stores, as bartenders packed their backrooms to state-allowed limits.

One store in Coeur d'Alene sold $128,586 worth of liquor, most of it to the resort's bars. That's more than the entire state system sells in a normal day.

"At least I had knowledge of it ahead of time," said Suzie Riplinger, manager of the downtown store. The bartenders phoned in their orders ahead of time, but they all decided to pick them up on Monday, she said. The store averages between $4,000

Daughter of former resident found murdered in Seattle

By BONNIE BAIRD JONES
Times-News writer

BUHL — The young daughter of a former Twin Falls resident and the cousin of a Buhl woman, Edith Graffee, was the victim of a brutal murder in Seattle, Wash., earlier this month.

Mrs. Graffee told the Times-News that Katherine Leighton, 15, the daughter of former area resident Ralph Miles Leighton, was killed Sept. 18. Her body was found Sept. 22 by two persons walking in a park in West Seattle, about a mile from her home. Relatives said she was badly beaten and shot and it was not sure which of her injuries may have caused her death. Officers believed the girl had died about two days after she disappeared from school.

She had entered a public school about two miles from her home on Sept. 9, and disappeared Sept. 16. When she failed to return from school that evening, a search was made without success.

Mrs. Graffee said a suspect has been arrested. The youth, about the same age as the victim, was seen talking to Katherine on the school grounds Monday and had been questioned the following day. He told officers the girl had said she was going to run away and join a circus, but the girl's mother convinced officers that it was highly unlikely the girl would be considering such action.

Officers told the family they suspected drugs could have been involved since the young victim had taken $50 in cash to school to pay for books and other school needs the day she was last seen.

The Buhl woman said her uncle and father of the victim died earlier this summer.

Pheasant crash lands in Twin Falls home

TWIN FALLS — The pheasant-hunting season hasn't opened yet, but a Twin Falls woman already has her pheasant.

Cleo Whitely of 2077 Sherry Drive called Twin Falls police Tuesday evening to ask what she should do about an unusual problem she had.

She told officers there was a pheasant sitting in her house that was a little dazed but not causing any problems — just sitting quietly in the living room. She said it had flown against a window, crashing through a screen and glass windowpane.

Officers went to the home and picked up the pheasant rooster. They said it was docile and didn't appear injured. The bird was transported to the police department and turned over to local Fish and Game officials.

and $5,000 sales on a routine day.

Most stores recorded higher numbers of walk-in customers, as well as the increased purchasing from bar owners, Baugh said.

The rush began about the middle of last week and peaked Monday, he said.

Magic Valley stores were typical of the rest of the state. The Burley stores, which averages $1,500 sales per day, took in $4,700 last Friday and $3,100 Monday.

The Ketchum branch, which normally sells $3,900 worth of booze a day, took in $11,000 on two days last week.

The Gooding outlet sells $300 on an average day, but sold $3,600 worth of liquor Monday.

And both Twin Falls stores also were up.

The downtown branch had $4,700 worth of sales Monday, about double the normal amount.

The Filer Avenue branch sold $11,500 worth of liquor Monday — 1,331 bottles — with about $5,000 going to bar accounts and about $6,500 to individual customers, said Manager Leroy Jazwick.

"Just about every bar in our area for our store threw in their last shots, and we got quite a bit of them out on that day," he said.

The bars weren't the only volume buyers. About every third walk-in customer walked out with a case of liquor, he estimated.

Clerk Dick Reed said the customers clearly were stocking up.

"They were sticking with old familiars (brands), and they were buying for the holidays," he said.

Baugh said Tuesday that the state liquor dispensary had prepared for the rush by stocking up on inventories and shipping them ahead of time to its outlets.

Whether the rush to the liquor stores will cut back receipts during the next few months is anybody's guess, Baugh said.

However, the application of the tax only to liquor could eventually hurt sales, he said. Some consumers might be tempted to switch from hard liquor to beer or wine, which contain less alcohol.

"We just don't know what is going to happen now — whether there'll be trade-downs or trade-offs," he said.

Some distillers camouflaged their own price increases by raising them at the same time as the excise taxes. But 90 percent of the price boosts came from the new taxes, Baugh said.

The liquor dispensary took only its normal markup, which is based on a percentage of the wholesale price, he said.

It also publicized the coming tax increase to consumers with leaflets in its stores.

"I guess the main thing was trying to get across the point that it wasn't us that was trying to increase the prices," Baugh said. "It was the federal government trying to increase the prices."

ed through LIDs, Petersen said. The final payment was made this year on the LID that raised part of the money for downtown improvements 15 years ago. Property owners were taxed about $1 a month per foot of frontage, Petersen said.

A LID had been considered by the BID to improve downtown lighting, but on Sept. 16, the council voted to use $42,000 of city money to replace decorative lights with new sodium fixtures.

The vote to spend $42,000 for the lighting and another $15,000 for holiday lights passed unanimously, but there were some comments that the downtown merchants need to take a more active part in improving downtown.

Faulkner said he will call a meeting of merchants on the central three blocks of downtown to discuss covering Main Avenue.

A LID can be established by the City Council, but Petersen said the council would not force one unless it had "almost unanimous support."

Hanchey, a member of the fire department in Twin Falls for the past eight years, volunteered for cross-training in police work last March. His successful completion of the POST Academy training gives him a basic certification rating in police work.

Qualls said the new PSO designate will be spending about 20 percent of his time as a patrolman in the Police Department and 80 percent as a fire fighter. He will receive a monthly bonus of $83.30 for his efforts in cross-training for work in both departments.

Another Fire Department member is scheduled to attend POST after the first of the year, Qualls said, and two others have volunteered for the cross training.

These men will work in addition to the four original PSO appointees who have necessary skills to handle the double assignments.

The first PSO appointees in Twin Falls were men with police certification who have trained or were experienced in fire fighting. All officers and fire fighters have been given an opportunity to volunteer for cross-training in police work last March. His successful completion of the POST Academy training gives him a basic certification rating in police work.

The city of Twin Falls pioneered the public safety program in Idaho, and Qualls said he has received inquiries from a number of other cities that are looking into such a move. He said he has been pleased with the progress made since the department was created early in 1984.

Receives $46,950

BOISE (AP) — Sen. Steve Symms, R-Idaho, was one of seven members of Congress' two tax-writing committees who received more than $20,000 during the first six months of 1985 from insurance company political action committees, a Common Cause study shows.

Symms received $46,950 from the PACs, the fourth-highest amount of any member of the Senate Finance or House Ways and Means committees, the report said.

Sen. Robert Packwood, R-Ore., chairman of the Finance Committee, received the most money, $105,000. He was followed by Sen. Charles Grassley, R-Iowa, with $51,350; Senate Majority Leader Robert Dole, R-Kan., with $50,500; and Symms.

Insurance company PACs also gave $33,950 to Rep. Henson Moore, R-La.; $21,750 to Rep. Frank Guarini, D-N.J.; and $21,300 to Rep. Barbara Kennelly, D-Conn., Common Cause said.

"The insurance industry is plastering the tax-writing committees with PAC money intended to protect their tax preferences," Common Cause President Fred Wertheimer said in a prepared statement. "Members of the Ways and Means and Senate Finance committees have a special obligation to the public to prevent the industry from obtaining preferred tax treatment at the expense of the rest of the taxpayers."

The Common Cause study, called "Paying a Premium" found that the insurance PACs gave a total of $533,346 during the first six months of this year, more than three times what they gave in 1983.

Common Cause is a non-partisan group that keeps track of campaign contributions and spending.

The group said the insurance industry especially is opposed to President Reagan's plan to tax employer-paid health insurance premiums and the cash value of insurance policies and annuities.

Phil Roberger, Symms' chief of staff, called Common Cause a "liberal mouthpiece." He said it ignores the fact that 500,000 Idahoans would be hurt economically if insurance premiums were taxed.

Many people voluntarily contribute to insurance-company PACs, and Common Cause refuses to admit that, Roberger said.

Escapee put back in prison

OROFINO (AP) — A 23-year-old prison escapee was back in custody Tuesday following his escape from the North Idaho Correctional Institute less than 24 hours earlier.

Curtis Schmidt climbed over a fence at the prison Monday afternoon, according to Warden Dennis Bodily.

Schmidt hid until dark, then started for Lewiston, the warden said.

He was arrested in Lenore, about 23 miles east of Lewiston, by a corrections officer who was going to the prison to participate in the search, authorities said.

Bodily said Schmidt apparently didn't realize he was talking to a corrections officer when he asked if he was in Lewiston.

Chief named alcohol control director

BOISE (AP) — The former training director for the state Department of Law Enforcement has been named director of the department's Division of Alcohol and Beverage Control.

Mike Prentice, who served as training director from 1978 to 1983 before leaving state government for the private sector, replaces Barbara Gwartney.

Department Director John Rooney, who appointed Mrs. Gwartney in mid-1983, said she resigned four weeks ago, denying a published report that Mrs. Gwartney was forced to leave in a dispute over her travel expenses.

"It's my understanding she plans to do some lobbying," Rooney said. "That's her area of expertise."

Mrs. Gwartney was not immediately available for comment.

Prentice, who took over the $33,000-a-year job two weeks ago, had been serving as Rooney's administrative assistant since spring when he returned to Idaho after being the marketing director for a Dallas, Texas, company for two years. Prior to joining state government in 1978, Prentice was a member of the Boise police force, Rooney said.

Mrs. Gwartney, whose performance as division director Rooney described as satisfactory, had been the executive vice president of the Idaho Innkeepers Association prior to taking over the division 27 months ago. At that time, Rooney acknowledged her lack of law enforcement experience but emphasized her administrative abilities.

Six years earlier, Mrs. Gwartney, the wife of then-Gov. Reg. Mike Gwartney, R-Idaho, gained some notoriety when she became embroiled in a controversy over her application to be the secretary of the Senate Commerce and Labor Committee.

Idaho Power faces insurance cuts

BOISE (AP) — With scores of city and county governments trying to cope with loss of liability insurance coverage this week, Idaho Power Co., the state's largest electric utility, is facing coverage problems of its own.

Utility officials said their premiums for liability insurance have soared while the coverage they can obtain is dropping and some coverage is all but impossible to purchase.

Insurance Manager Richard Fisk said premium charges for basic liability coverage are over five times higher this year than last. In 1984, he said, $100 million in basic liability coverage cost the utility $180,000. This year, Idaho Power is paying $550,000 for just $50 million in liability insurance.

Premiums on property insurance have jumped 80 percent as well, he said, and coverage for the corporate directors and officers and protection against environmental damage claims and suits over alleged company errors or omissions is difficult if not impractical to get.

Scores of city and county governments lost their liability insurance at midnight Monday when carriers declined to renew policies across the state. One company, faced with a deluge of court suits, has agreed to extend coverage until the end of the year for about 70 local government entities and another major carrier is being pressured to do the same for 40 more.

Inmates, state settle out of court

BOISE (AP) — Sixty-five Idaho State Penitentiary inmates will receive more than $3,000, according to terms of an out-of-court settlement over the prison's commissary.

In the settlement filed in U.S. District Court in Boise, prison officials do not admit liability in the case, and inmates agree to dismiss a class-action lawsuit filed against Corrections Department officials in February 1984.

The suit stemmed from prison officials' freezing of 99 inmate accounts Feb. 6, 1984, when they discovered some accounts had not been charged for items purchased at the commissary.

Corrections Director Al Murphy ordered the accounts frozen until inmates signed a withdrawal slip for the amount the business office determined each inmate owed. He also ordered that inmates refusing to pay be disciplined.

The office later reviewed accounts and determined 18 of the inmates did not owe money. Their accounts were unfrozen.

The inmates' lawsuit accused officials of confiscating inmate accounts without due process of law of misappropriating substantial sums from the fund, and of improperly operating the fund.

Under the settlement, the state agreed to pay individual inmates amounts ranging from $1.20 to $410.

Firm drops cigarette ad after Indian publisher complains

PIERRE, S.D. (AP) — A cigarette ad showing a totem pole of Indian women working at menial tasks was canceled after the prize-winning publisher of an Indian newspaper complained that it was degrading, a Philip Morris Co. official said Tuesday.

The Virginia Slims Lights ad, published in several national magazines in the past few months, is apparently the first one Philip Morris ever withdrew after receiving complaints, said Guy L. Smith IV, vice president for corporate affairs.

"Our intention is that advertising is not to offend anybody," Smith said in a telephone interview from his New York office. "We learned it was objectionable to American Indians, so we removed it."

The ad was killed in response to a complaint by Tim Giago, publisher of the nation's largest Indian-owned weekly newspaper, The Lakota Times in Martin, S.D.

Giago, who learned of the withdrawal last week in a letter from Smith, last month won the H.L. Mencken Award, presented annually by The Baltimore Sun for distinguished writing by a newspaper columnist.

"I thought it was nice that they would respond to us, and in a way they would admit they were wrong and they would pull the ad, which was all we wanted them to do anyhow," Giago said.

The ad showed a totem pole of eight Indian women, who each bear such titles as "Princess Wash and Scrub," "Little Running Water Fetcher" and "Woman Who Plucks Feathers for Chief's Headdress." Above the totem pole, the ad said, "Virginia Slims remembers one of many societies where the women stood head and shoulders above the men."

The totem pole stood alongside a smiling, well dressed woman smoking a cigarette with the Virginia Slims advertising theme, "You've come a long way, baby."

The ad is typical of misconceptions many people have of Indians, said Giago, 51, a member of the Oglala Sioux Tribe.

"I've seen it happen time and time again," Giago said. "Huge corporations and large newspapers feel they can do anything about Indians, whether it be advertisements or news stories, with total impunity."

The Virginia Slims suggestion that Indian women have come a long way neglected the fact that Indian women in the 1800s had many more rights in their society than white women enjoyed, he said.

And the ad's use of a totem pole desecrated a religious artifact used by Indians in the Northwest, said Giago, whose columns appear in seven newspapers in South Dakota and other states.

Smith said Philip Morris has a good record of supporting minority groups, and the ad featuring Indian women simply backfired.

"In our Virginia Slims advertising over the years we've used exaggerated humor — in some cases not even exaggerated — to demonstrate the difficulties all women, white, black or Indian, have had until society became enlightened," Smith said.

Philip Morris is particularly sensitive to Indians because they discovered tobacco and introduced it to white men, Smith said. In the letter to Giago last week, he said company officials are "aware of, and appreciative of, the vital role native Americans played in making tobacco an integral part of the world we live in today."

Giago said advertisers and reporters should find out more about Indians before they write about them.

"It's not so much that they're trying to be malicious, it's just ignorance," he said.

Indians are stepping up their fight against what they see as demeaning references in mass media.

But projects can't advocate a viewpoint

State can fund public policy projects

BOISE (AP) — Public policy projects such as "Russian Awareness Week," held two years ago in Boise, can be funded by state humanities associations as long as they don't advocate one point of view, a report by the General Accounting Office has concluded.

But the GAO audit took no position on whether the Russian Awareness Week project violated the federal and state advocacy policies. It did say that the Association for the Humanities in Idaho has the proper policies in place to prevent advocacy projects from getting funded.

The GAO, the investigative arm of Congress, studied Russian Awareness Week and humanities programs in four other states after questions were raised by Sen. Steve Symms, R-Idaho, and Rep. Denny Smith, R-Ore.

The senators asked whether such programs should be funded by the National Endowment for the Humanities and state associations.

Phil Reberger, Symms' chief of staff, said he had no comment on the audit because he had not reviewed it. He said he did not know that the report had been issued.

Russian Awareness Week was held in October 1983 at Boise State University. The week included discussions of Russian history, contemporary life in the Soviet Union and U.S.-Soviet relations.

The late Sen. Frank Church, D-Idaho, the former chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, was the keynote speaker for the event. Church's speech, which drew fire from opponents of the program, was on U.S.-Soviet relations and U.S. relations with Third World countries.

Critics of the program said the [illegible] was poor because it came [illegible] less than two months after the Soviet Union shot down Korean Air Lines Flight 007. But the Idaho humanities association awarded an $11,000 grant for the project the June before the flight was shot down.

Tom McClanahan, executive director of the Association for the Humanities in Idaho, said the GAO audit is not a vindication of Russian Awareness Week because it doesn't say whether the program violated the advocacy rules. But he said the association views the report as favorable because it clearly says such projects can be funded by the humanities association.

The audit "clears up some of the misunderstandings around that project," McClanahan said. "We think it is a pretty fair investigation."

McClanahan said the report took so long because the GAO had to get responses from the state association and the national endowment on its draft report.

Sheriffs investigate quick escape

MOSCOW (AP) — The Latah County Sheriff's Department is trying to determine if Leslie I. Rogge, a Seattle man who was being held on federal bank robbery charges, had inside help when he escaped from the county jail on Sunday.

Rogge, 45, escaped within a half hour time period through the two-door emergency exit of the jail. The doors usually are locked and are the only ones not electronically controlled from the jailer's office.

The escapee remained at large on Tuesday.

"The doors were open, and no force was used," said Sheriff Ken Buxton. "We don't know whether there was involvement from inside (the sheriff's department) or if there was outside assistance. We're still investigating what happened.

"I don't want to cast any suspicions erroneously," Buxton added. "You always have speculation about what happened, but what counts in this business is facts."

Rogge was convicted in federal court here on Wednesday of two bank robbery charges stemming from a Post Falls bank heist. He was sentenced to two 20-year jail terms. The terms were to run concurrently and Rogge was awaiting transfer to federal prison.

Rogge was transferred to the Latah County Jail in April from a Pennsylvani a prison where he had been serving a 25-year term on a Florida bank robbery conviction.

Federal Marshal Blaine Skinner confirmed Monday that Rogge was the same prisoner that his office had moved from the jail on Labor Day weekend after receiving a tip that a breakout attempt was planned.

"He sure had nothing to lose by trying to escape," Skinner said. He noted that Rogge had only served about one year on the Florida sentence, leaving him with almost 45 more years to serve.

Rogge is described as being 6 feet tall and weighing about 160 pounds.

Wyoming tailings decision stalled

RIVERTON, Wyo. (AP) — To break a federal-state deadlock over remedial action for the Susquehanna uranium mill tailings pile, Wyoming may ask an independent technical firm to evaluate data and determine if proposed plans would succeed.

At this point, the federal Department of Energy believes the 900,000-ton pile of uranium mill wastes near St. Stephen's Mission can be stabilized safely where it is.

But the state Department of Environmental Quality isn't so sure. It has recommended the pile be moved from its current location between the Big Wind and Little Wind rivers.

Neither side appears ready to budge, says Nancy Freudenthal, an attorney in Gov. Ed Herschler's office.

And Freudenthal senses sentiment at the staff level that technical issues are not as clearly resolved as portrayed in DOE's document.

Freudenthal said an independent assessment could reveal whether, given conditions at the site and DOE's proposed design, EPA standards for radon gas emissions, groundwater contamination and other factors can be met. Freudenthal doesn't believe that's been established.

"We're not looking at a rehash, nor additional data compilation, but a critical assessment," Freudenthal said. "We're not asking for a guarantee or an insurance policy, but a better stated technical assessment. Ultimately, there are political elements that need to be evaluated."

Political decisions — among them, demands by the Shoshone and Arapahoe tribes that the tailings pile be moved off the Wind River Reservation — could be crystallized with a third-party technical evaluation.

The governor, Freudenthal said, has been very sensitive to the tribal position.

Freudenthal didn't know how much a third-party assessment would cost. Wyoming asked DOE if it would share costs on a third-party assessment. The federal agency refused to do so.

Small planes collide in air

DALLAS (AP) — Two small, private airplanes collided in flight and crashed in a rural residential area Tuesday, killing at least five people but narrowly missing houses, police said.

The bulk of one of the planes fell into a field southeast Dallas landfill, and the other disintegrated about a mile away after the 1:30 p.m. accident, Dallas police spokesman Ed Spencer said.

He said he didn't know if any people in addition to the five victims were aboard the two planes but said no one on the ground was injured.

None of the victims were immediately identified.

A Cessna 152 single-engine plane "came down pretty much in one piece," within a quarter mile of houses, Spencer said, but a twin-engine Cessna 414, apparently exploded and scattered wreckage over a large area.

Robert Trevino, who was at a house east of the landfill, said he heard two rapid-fire explosions, looked up and "only one came down. It twirled down."

Dallas police Lt. Kirk Stuart said some witnesses reported seeing two planes, but witness Linda Laird said, "all I saw was pieces of the plane going everywhere. I only saw one plane."

Carlton succeeds Sheriff Fanning

GRANTS PASS, Ore. (AP) — Jim Carlton was sworn in Monday as sheriff of Josephine County.

In a brief swearing in ceremony, Circuit Judge Larry Cushing gave to oath of office to Carlton, who succeeds retired sheriff Jim Fanning.

Carlton served as undersheriff for Fanning for seven years and was appointed sheriff by county commissioners after a stormy pair of public hearings in which deputies voiced complaints about his performance.

Fanning joined the sheriff's department as a jailer in 1967 and was first elected sheriff in 1978.

Carlton will fill a term that expires at the end of 1986.

Computer checks print files fast, puts finger on bad guys

By STEVE BREWER
The Associated Press

SAN FRANCISCO — When police recently identified Richard Ramirez as the prime suspect in the "Night Stalker" murders, the hero of the story was a computer that matched a fingerprint found on a stolen car.

Matching tiny data from fingerprints found at crime scenes to prints on file, the Japanese-made system can do in minutes what might take a human analyst months or even years to do by hand.

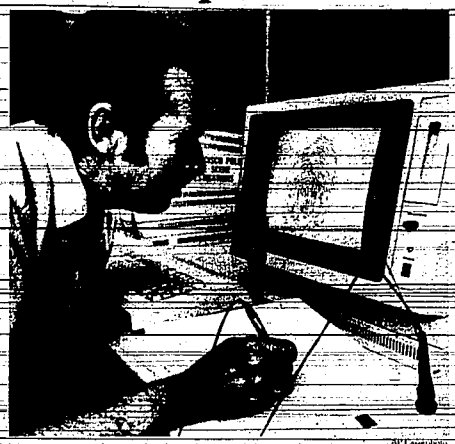
It's a tool, computer consultant Tom Ruggles says, which can "find a needle in a haystack."

The system is in use in Tokyo, Alaska and California, where the Legislature recently approved a bill that would provide local police jurisdictions with remote terminals connected to the central computer in Sacramento.

In the Night Stalker case, fingerprints were taken from a car spotted at the scene of an Aug. 25 shooting linked to the Stalker and flown from Los Angeles to Sacramento to be checked by the new Department of Justice computer. It was the computer's first case.

In 14 minutes, it spit out the names of Ramirez and five others with similar fingerprint patterns. Ramirez's name was at the top of the list.

Ramirez, 25, was charged this past Friday in Los Angeles with 68 felony counts, including 14 murders and five attempted murders as well as various robberies, rapes and kidnappings. He has been held without bail since his Aug. 31 arrest.



Sgt. Bob Dagitz demonstrates new fingerprint computer

Since installing a computer like Sacramento's 19 months ago, San Francisco police have tripled the number of identifications, according to Sgt. Bob Dagitz.

"With this computer, we have been able to identify perpetrators that would have never been caught under the old system," said Dagitz, a 27-year police veteran and head of the department's Crime Scene Investigations unit.

In cases where investigators have no suspects to narrow the field and must rely solely on fingerprints, Dagitz said, the computer has made almost as many identifications in a month as human analysts previously made in a year.

Investigators used to identify fingerprint traits like whorls, arches and loops to narrow the field, then dug through files one at a time, comparing prints to make an identification.

Dagitz once calculated that one person working eight hours a day would take 33 years to manually compare a single fingerprint to the more than 300,000 cards the department has on file.

"With the computer, it would take maybe an hour," he said.

The department's computer consists of a fingerprint reader and video screens where investigators can take a close look at the ridges that form the fingerprint patterns.

Dagitz and other investigators place a photograph or a tracing of a fingerprint in the reader, which relays the pattern into the computer's memory.

The analyst can "touch up" imperfections in the reproduction on the video screen and have the computer reduce or enlarge portions of the image.

With red dots, the machine marks the "minutiae points" that distinguish a fingerprint from any other, then links the dots together.

The investigator then enters any information known about the person to whom the fingerprint belongs — sex, race and approximate age.

"The search takes anywhere from one minute to over an hour, depending on how much information you give it," Dagitz said. "You always get a candidates list back."

The computer scores the candidates by how many minutiae points coincide. The investigator can tell from the scores whether the fingerprint matches any on the list.

With the system, fingerprints taken from people arrested for the first time automatically are checked against the file of latent prints lifted from crime scenes. The method sometimes uncovers suspects on cases that had remained unsolved for years.

Dagitz said a glue-sniffer recently jailed for his own protection was fingerprinted and the computer showed that his prints were found at the site of a homicide several years ago. The case is under investigation.

In another case, Dagitz said, a latent fingerprint from a burglary scene was run through the computer and matched to a man who eventually confessed to committing 25 burglaries in recent years.

The new computer in Sacramento works in a similar way and was made by the same company, Nippon Electronics Co. of Tokyo. It contains the fingerprints of about 1.7 million people.

Ruggles said the remote terminals the legislative bill would provide will allow local jurisdictions to tap into those files. His firm did equipment studies for both systems.

The bill, introduced by Sen. John Foran, D-San Francisco, sets aside $7 million and outlines a master plan for the network's first 18 months.

If Gov. George Deukmejian signs it by Wednesday, the $7 million will be used to pay 70 percent of the cost of terminals connected to the $22 million Sacramento computer during that period. The remaining 30 percent — up to $2 million for major cities — will be paid by the local police departments.

SEATTLE (AP) — Jean Craig, one of 10 members of the white supremacist sect The Order on trial for racketeering, told a friend she traveled to Denver in 1984 to take pictures as part of a job, the friend testified Tuesday.

Prosecutors claim Ms. Craig tracked Denver radio host Alan Berg before four other Order members shot him to death on June 18, 1984.

Lucille Walker, of Laramie, Wyo., also said Ms. Craig used her telphone during the spring and summer of 1984, and sent her a package this year containing newspaper clippings about the death of Order founder and leader Robert Mathews.

The 10 defendants are charged in federal court with numerous crimes attributed to The Order, which the government says was dedicated to eliminating Jews and minorites and establishing a "White American Bastion." The crimes include the Berg slaying, a second homicide, robbery and counterfeiting, the government contends.

U.S. attorneys allege the 10 defendants and 13 others staged a 14-year crime campaign to support a racist war.

Ms. Walker, who said she had known Ms. Craig since 1979, said Ms. Craig was a "good friend" who once rented a house from her in Laramie. But she was unable to point Ms. Craig out in court.

Ms. Walker was frequently vague on dates under questioning by Assistant U.S. Attorney Bob Ward, but said Ms. Craig mentioned at least twice in 1984 that she was taking trips to Colorado.

She said Ms. Craig had an interest in photography, and once said she was going to Colorado "to take pictures" for a job.

On another occasion, she said, Ms. Craig told her she was visiting Colorado "for some kind of health lecture or something," and another time said she was going to visit a church with her daughter, Zillah.

Zillah Craig was Mathews' girlfriend, and Ms. Walker said Jean Craig often used Ms. Walker's Acle phone to receive calls from Mathews.

"She said that Bob would call her at 7 in the evening, so that she would know when to be there to get the call," Ms. Walker said.

Earlier evidence showed a call was placed to Ms. Walker's home about 7 p.m. Laramie time from a pay phone in Issaquah, Wash., on April 22, 1984. That was one day before a Seattle armored car robbery prosecutors say was committed by Order members. The phone booth was near a motel where the robbers allegedly stayed.

Order members, led by Mathews, are accused of committing both the April 23 robbery in Seattle and a similar crime on March 16, 1984. Mathews died in a shootout with FBI agents on Whidbey Island in Puget Sound last December.

Earlier Tuesday, witnesses to that robbery said the thieves flashed guns and overpowered guards before making off with a half-million dollars.

Robert White, driver of the Continental Armored Transport truck robbed April 23, 1984 at Seattle's Northgate shopping center, said he had just pushed a release switch for his partner to enter the back of the truck when he saw people surrounding the vehicle.

"Get out or you will die," read a sign held near the cab by a masked man, White said. Another man trained an automatic rifle on White, the driver testified.

Oregon timber revenues rise in fiscal '85

PORTLAND, Ore. (AP) — Oregon counties received 7 percent more in revenue from national forests in fiscal 1985, but revenue from Washington national forests dipped 15 percent, compared with the previous fiscal year.

The Forest Service reported Monday that 31 Oregon counties would receive $92.5 million in timber sale revenue and other income earned by 13 national forests, up from $86.5 million in fiscal 1984.

In Washington, 27 counties will receive $21.3 million from six national forests, down from $25.4 million the previous year.

The counties receive 25 percent of revenue from national forests, with the remainder going to the federal government.

Counties get to keep 75 percent of the local share, while the other 25 percent goes to school districts.

Oregon traditionally receives more timber revenue than any other state and 1985 was no exception.

The Forest Service estimates that about 4.8 billion board feet of timber was logged from national forests in the two states in the 1985 fiscal year, up from 4.7 billion in 1984.

X-country meet kicks off CSI week

By The Times-News

TWIN FALLS — College of Southern Idaho's athletic portion of its 20th anniversary week kicks off with an invitational cross country meet this afternoon at Canyon Springs Golf Course.

All of the school's athletic teams will join in to mark the special week, with Coach Ben Stroud and his volleyball women playing in Ontario, Ore., tonight and again against Treasure Valley Community College in the CSI gymnasium Friday at 7 p.m.

Following Friday's volleyball, the second annual alumni basketball game — punctuated by an all-comers slam dunk contest — at halftime — will be staged. That game will feature Tim Bassett and Victor Kelly, off the 1971 national runner-up team and Mark Rich of New York City, one of the first Gold-en Eagles back in 1967. In addition, more recent Eagle alumni such as — both of whom played for Northwest Nazarene College last year — will participate, including Marc Owen of Boise, College of Idaho and Seattle SuperSonic draftee. Representing the national championship team of 1976 will be Eric Hovey and Dennis Bowyer of Twin Falls. Gary Quesnell, a teammate of Bassett's, will play along with several others from over the years.

The highlight could be the slam dunk contest which should feature current CSI players Joey Johnson, he of the 48-inch vertical rise, and Chris Blocker, a sophomore who jumps extremely well.

Both profess to have never lost a slam dunk contest. Johnson won three straight Basketball Congress International prep championships at nationals in Phoenix.

Action continues Saturday with the return of the CSI "get-a-hole-in-one, win a new car" contest, which will be contested on the west side of the gymnasium on campus. Twin Falls new car dealers are helping to sponsor the event which will provide a new car for the first ace.

At 1 p.m. Friday and Saturday, CSI Coach Jim Walker will display his 1986 baseball team and give fans a chance to see the new Jim Walker Field, replete with covered stands for spectators.

Walker's team will take on the College of Eastern Utah in an exhibition game at 1 o'clock Friday, and meet Ricks in another exhibition at the same hour Saturday.

Social highlight will be a booster party at the Holiday Inn following the alumni basketball game Friday night. Refreshments and a no-host bar will be available.

On Saturday, four of the world's top cowboys will be in the Expo Center to help the school celebrate its anniversary.

Eight-time world call roping champion Dean Oliver of Boise will take on defending Professional Rodeo Cowboys Association all-around champ Dee Pickett of Caldwell in a calf roping match. And Kent Cooper of Malta will face defending PRCA saddle bronc champ Brad Gjermundson of Marshall, N.D., in a saddle bronc ride-off.

The Circle J Match of Champions, as the event is called, is scheduled to 8 p.m. There will also be a bullriding match between the top three 1985 Western States junior riders and the top three Little Britches junior bullriders. Also scheduled is a barrel racing match between the top three senior and the top three junior barrel racers from the two associations, as well as a breakaway roping match between the top six Western States senior girls and the top six junior boys.

Tickets are $20 for mezzanine seats, $5 for adult general admission and $3.50 for children.

"We're kind of fired up because we're leading this anniversary week off for the athletic department," said track Coach Rick Neill of today's cross country run.

Ricks, Weber, Boise State and CSI women will square off in a 5,000-meter run at 4 p.m., with CSI and Ricks men colliding in a dual over five miles at 4:30 p.m.

"Last week we matched up pretty well against the BSU men until the fifth man — and we didn't have any. This will be (sophomore) John Raveling's first outing because of injury this week so we're hopeful the men can get into the win column."

The competition will be tough for the CSI women, but Neill will keep a close eye on Jill Tilzey. "Jill could finish well up in this field but we have to keep her workouts down because of a deep muscle pull in a hamstring," Neill said. "We're hav-

Angels rise again

In AL West

By JOHN NELSON
The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY — Mike Witt had one less day to think about an important start, and now the California Angels have one less game to win in their pursuit of the American League West title.

The Angels regained a one-game lead over Kansas City in the divison Tuesday night as Witt pitched California to a 4-2 victory with 1⅓ innings of relief help from Donnie Moore.

Witt originally was scheduled to pitch Wednesday night's game, but Angels Manager Gene Mauch changed his rotation Monday to bring Witt back on three days' rest.

"After we talked it over for a long time, it became too logical not to do," Mauch said. "If the race goes down to the end, we would have had to bring back Witt on three days' rest Sunday. Instead, we pitch him now on three days' rest after he threw only 39 pitches in his last start in Cleveland, and now if he goes Sunday, he'll have four days' rest."

Witt didn't make it out of the fourth inning in his last start at Cleveland. It was his second straight loss after a five-game winning streak.

Witt said the late switch didn't bother him. In fact, it might have helped.

"I've done well on one day's notice before," Witt said. "It might have been to my advantage because it gave me one less day to think about it."

Royals Manager Dick Howser said Witt was constantly around the plate with his pitches, "and when he throws strikes, he is tough. Witt did his job, and Moore finished us off."

The Angels lost the first game of this four-game set, 3-1, to the Royals Monday night. That produced the seventh tie-in 11 days between the two teams for the AL West lead.

"Now it's a five-game season," Mauch said. "As well as these guys have played, it would have been a

Cosell flouts ex-colleagues, network, NFL

RADNOR, Pa. (AP) — Howard Cosell says telecasts of ABC's Monday Night Football were "dreadful" after he left, and he is sure that his absence is reflected in the show's ratings drop.

"Without me, the nature of the telecasts was entirely altered," Cosell said in his book, I Never Played the Game, excerpted in next week's issue of TV Guide magazine.

"I had commanded attention. I had a palpable impact on the show, giving it a sense of moment," Cosell wrote, adding that when he watched the show without him "it seemed no different from an ordinary Sunday afternoon telecast."

"If that sounds like ego, what can I say? I'm telling it like it is," Cosell concluded.

Monday Night Football ratings fell last year, the first year without Cosell, the show's ratings are higher this year.

Cosell said he tried to watch several shows at home after he was no longer in the broadcast booth, but he barely made it through half-time highlights before falling asleep.

"There was never a storyline, only discussions of play upon play upon play," he wrote. "No perspective. No reportage beyond the game. No humanization of the players. Only feeble attempts at humor, trying to be funny and prove they could prosper without me. There wasn't a skilled performer among them."

The show still needs a star to help it, Cosell said.

"Let's not forget that first and foremost Monday Night Football is prime-time entertainment. It must attract big numbers, women as well as men."

Cosell suggested Bill Cosby as someone who could shake up the show and make people take notice.

"A former college football star and an avid sports enthusiast, he knows what he's talking about," Cosell wrote. "What's more, he's a brilliant communicator and his performing skills are above reproach."

Cosby played football at Temple University in Philadelphia and based one of his early comedy routines on a game against Hofstra. Cosell conceded that, at the moment, Cosby has a very successful comedy show on NBC, making him unavailable.

HOWARD COSELL
Burning bridges

"Too bad for ABC — but that's the way they should be thinking," he wrote.

In other excerpts from his book, Cosell wrote:

• He was depressed to the point of physical illness after being criticized nationwide for calling Washington Redskins wide receiver Alvin Garrett "a little monkey" during a telecast. Garrett is black, but Cosell insisted that the remark was innocent.

• He and O.J. Simpson had a falling out after Simpson made some denigrating remarks about Cosell's performance on the show. They patched things up after Cosell took some time off and Simpson telephoned to ask him to come back. During the call, Simpson "broke down and cried."

• Cosell's wife, Emmy, told him to see the season through in 1983, but to quit after that.

• Joe Namath, the new man in the Monday Night Football booth, can help the package if he is wise enough not to concentrate on analysis. "One hopes he will not be part of the 'jock' syndrome," Cosell wrote. Namath is

TCU's grid slush fund scandal spreads wider

Editor's note: A year ago Texas Christian was the toast of college football, the Cinderella team back from the dead and knocking on the Cotton Bowl door. Now a slush fund scandal has erupted, and TCU finds itself questioning some of the practices concerning students who are also athletes.

By MIKE COCHRAN
The Associated Press

FORT WORTH, Texas — In his 1984 bestseller, Life Is Ownself, author Dan Jenkins spun a fictional yarn about a wealthy oilman who bought Texas Christian University a football team.

It appears now that the darkly humorous account of collegiate chicanery could have been based on life its ownself.

The real-life TCU saga is at least as bizarre but not nearly as humorous, although there may be something perversely funny about a covert alumni group buying a team that won six games in three years, 1980-1982.

Still, nobody's laughing.

In a matter of days, the university's upbeat football program has nosedived into a payoff scandal that already extends beyond TCU and could spread throughout the troubled Southwest Conference.

An NCAA investigator arrived on campus at mid-week.

The casualty list includes one 21-carat trustee and seven premier football players, headed by running back Kenneth Davis.

TCU's dilemma dates back several years to the regime of former Coach

Indians' skipper rehired

CLEVELAND (AP) — Cleveland Indians Manager Pat Corrales was signed Tuesday to what the American League team called a perpetual contract.

Corrales had been signed through the 1986 baseball season. The new contract is open-ended with no expiration date.

The announcement by Indians President Peter Bavasi came two days after the injury-riddled Indians recorded its 100th loss of the season.

"This is not a one, two or three year contract but a perpetual contract," Bavasi said. "It provides a clear direction that Pat is here for a long time as part of our management team. Though this type of contract is not common in sports, it is becoming more so in baseball. In fact, Bobby Cox has a similar contract in Toronto with the Blue Jays."

Corrales has been the Indians' field manager since July 31, 1983, after previously managing the Texas Rangers and the ST. LOUIS — Darryl Strawberry hit a two-out home run in the 11th inning and Ron Darling combined with Jesse Orosco on a four-hitter Tuesday night, keeping the New York Mets alive in the National League East with dramatic 1-0 triumph over the St. Louis Cardinals.

Strawberry's 28th homer, which came after reliever Ken Dayley struck out the first two batters he faced, capped a game otherwise dominated by Darling and St. Louis starter John Tudor. Neither Darling nor Tudor, however, got a decision.

The victory in the opener of the three-game series pulled the Mets within two games of first-place St. Louis and kept the Cardinals' magic number for clinching the division at four.

Tudor, who leads the major leagues with 10 shutouts, blanked the Mets for 10 innings on six hits. Darling shut out St. Louis on four hits for nine innings.

Dayley, 4-4, replaced Tudor to start the 11th and struck out Keith Hernandez and Gary Carter. But Strawberry hit a 1-1 pitch into the right-field bleachers for the game's only run.

Orosco, 8-6, pitched out of trouble in both the 10th and 11th innings. In the 10th, the Cardinals had runners on first and second with two outs before pinch-hitter Jack Clark flied out.

In the 11th, center-fielder Mookie Wilson dropped Tommy Herr's shallow fly for a two-base error, and Herr took third on a groundout by pinch-hitter Brian Harper. Orosco ended the game by retiring pinch-hitter Ivan DeJesus on a fly ball to Wilson.

Wolverines top Buhl, Tigers; complicate matters in SCIC

By The Times-News

Volleyball

BUHL — In a South-Central Idaho Conference triangular volleyball meet here Tuesday, the hometown Indians split with the Jerome Tigers and the Wood River Wolverines.

In varsity action, Wood River came out on top overall by defeating Buhl 10-15, 15-7, 15-8, then taking Jerome 15-11, 15-12. The Indians defeated the Tigers 15-7, 5-15 and 15-11.

Wood River's sweep deadlocked the Wolverines and the Indians for seeding purposes for the District 4 Class A-2 tournament, scheduled in two weeks.

Buhl came out on top in the jayvee matches by defeating Wood River 15-9, 8-15, and 15-8. They also defeated Jerome 15-13, 15-3. The Wolverine juniors also got by the Tiger jayvees.

Indians win another

DIETRICH — Shoshone rallied from behind on both occasions to protect its undefeated boast by beating Dietrich 15-13, 15-12 Tuesday night in a non-conference prep volleyball match.

Dietrich had a good opportunity to take the first game, jumping ahead 13-7, only to see Shoshone come back to win 15-13. In the second game, Shoshone moved ahead 10-4 but then hung there as the Blue Devils flurried into a 10-6 advantage.

But the Indians again turned to the hitting of Julie Hibbard to spark the comeback.

Solons top Burley

BURLEY — The Gooding Senators swept a pair of games from the Burley Bobcats in a non-conference prep volleyball match here Tuesday night.

Gooding, now 11-2 for the season, won the first game 15-3 and the second 15-11.

In jayvee action, the Bobcats beat Gooding 15-2, 15-8.

'Dogs whip Bucs

KIMBERLY — The Kimberly Bulldogs defeated the Hagerman Pirates 15-3, 15-13 in non-conference volleyball action here Tuesday night.

In jayvee action, Hagerman beat the Bulldogs 15-3, 16-14.

Minico wins two

RUPERT — The Minico Spartans swept a Gem State Conference triangular volleyball meet over Bonneville and Pocatello here Tuesday evening.

The Spartans got off to a good start with a 15-10, 13-15, 15-9 opening victory over the Bees, then continued their winning ways in their final match, 15-7, 14-16, 15-3 over the Indians.

Richfield sweeps

RICHFIELD — The Richfield Tigers snapped an eight-game losing streak at the expense of Ketchum-Sun Valley Community School and Gooding State in a Northside Conference triangular volleyball match here Tuesday night.

Paced by good net play from junior setter Renae Hiatt, the Tigers measured KSV 15-0, 15-7 and completed the sweep with a 15-2, 15-0 decision over the Gooding State Redskins.

Declo wins pair

WENDELL — Declo swept a pair of matches at a Canyon Conference prep volleyball triangular here Tuesday night.

The Hornets defeated both Glenns Ferry and Wendell in three games, while Glenns Ferry downed Wendell — also in three games.

No scores were available at press time.

The Wendell jayvees won both their matches with Declo and Glenns Ferry.

shame to dissipate our lead in two games. We're better off than we were last night. It was just one game, but it was a very important game."

After the four-game series here, the Angels finish the season with three games at Texas. The Royals wind up here with three games against Oakland. The Royals have lost four of their last five games.

The Angels scored three runs in the fifth and chased Kansas City left-hander Charlie Leibrandt, 17-9, who had won four of his previous five decisions.

Brian Downing and Dickie Schofield each had a pair of hits, and Bobby Grich homered for the Angels in the second. Schofield singled and scored in the fifth, and Downing drove in a run with a double and scored.

Before Willie Wilson's infield single in the fourth, Witt had retired 10 in a row, the only tough play being Frank White's hard grounder to the right of shortstop Schofield.

Grich hit his 13th homer of the season to straightaway center field with one out in the second. One out later, Schofield singled, but Leibrandt fanned Gary Pettis to avoid further damage.

Leibrandt, the AL's pitcher of the month in September when he went 4-1 with an 0.91 ERA, gave up a harmless two-out single to Juan Beniquez in the third, then retired the side in order for the first time in the game in the fourth.

But, in the fifth, Leibrandt fell apart. Schofield led off with his second hit, a soft line single to center. Pettis bunted to Leibrandt attempting to sacrifice, but White, covering first from his second-base position, dropped the low throw as both runners were safe.

Downing hit a fly ball down the right-field line that bounced against the wall for a double, scoring Schofield and sending Pettis to third. When Rod Carew, celebrating his 40th birthday, sent a flare into shallow left-center for a single, Pettis scored and Downing went to third. Beniquez then popped out to right field for the first out of the inning.

Doug DeCinces followed with a hard grounder to third, fielded cleanly by George Brett. But Brett double-clutched, then threw the ball in the dirt past first base for an error as Downing scored. DeCinces was credited with an infield single and wound up at second on the play, one base behind Carew.

That was the end of a night's work for Leibrandt, who had given up eight hits in 4⅓ innings, and brought on right-hander Steve Farr, who walked Reggie Jackson intentionally to load the bases. Grich then grounded into an inning-ending double play to third base. Brett threw home to force Carew, and Royals' catcher Jim Sundberg completed the play by throwing to first.

Kansas City broke through in the eighth. Lonnie Smith reach on a fielder's choice, and scored on a triple by Wilson. Brett singled him home.

Mets

A crowd of 46,026, the largest at Busch Stadium since a June 30 game against New York, watched the game on a brisk night.

The Mets had mounted scoring threats in the seventh and again in the ninth, and both times Tudor was equal to the challenge.

In the ninth, Carter led off with an opposite-field, bloop double to right. But Tudor struck out Strawberry, and after intentionally walking George Foster, fanned Howard Johnson and retired Rafael Santana on a grounder.

Tudor struck out Foster to start the seventh, and then gave up a bloop single to Ray Knight. Santana followed with a line-drive off the St. Louis pitcher's left foot that caromed into right field for a double, putting runners at second and third. Johnson was inserted as a pinch-runner for Knight, further enhancing New York's two-on, one-out opportunity.

With Darling at the plate, the Mets tried a suicide squeeze. But Darling missed the pitch and Johnson was tagged out in a rundown, with Santana moving to third on the play. Tudor then fell behind Darling 3-1 before getting him on a popup.

Terry Pendleton doubled with one out in the St. Louis seventh and Mike Jorgensen walked, but Darling escaped the jam by inducing Ozzie Smith to ground into a double play.

Tudor, who started the night with only 46 walks in 256 innings, and Darling each worked past bases-on-balls in the first inning. Darling walked Vince Coleman to start the St. Louis first, but the leading base stealer in the major leagues did not get past second as Darling retired the next three batters.

Tudor set down nine straight batters before walking Santana with two outs in the fifth. Darling followed with a single that sent Santana to second before Wilson popped up to end the inning.

In the New York sixth, Hernandez singled with one out and moved to second on a groundout by Carter. Strawberry hit a fly ball for the final out.

Darling retired eight straight batters between one-out singles by Willie McGee in the third and the sixth.

Tudor's remarkable record since the start of June has included three victories over New York. Over the span, he has permitted the Mets only 18 hits and two runs in 36⅓ innings.

Corrales

Philadelphia Phillies. The Indians are 162-219 under Corrales.

The Indians are in last place in the American League's Eastern Division with a 57-100 record going into Tuesday night's game against Seattle.

"I appreciate it and it gives me a chance to further work with our players and develop them," said Corrales. "I've never had or felt any real security in baseball — I want to work for everything I get.

"I don't intend for this to stop me from working even harder. It's a good feeling that they want me to be here."

Bavasi indicated that he had been considering making such a commitment to Corrales since Bavasi was named Indians' president in December 1984.

"Pat is not just an appendage who takes the blame for failure or the accolades for success," said Bavasi. "He is part of our senior staff and his responsibilities are different than other managers. The guy has a bigger voice.

"He's relentless and very sincere in wanting the club to improve. He can be very tough or very gentle and understands the needs of the ballplayers."

IT TAKES MORE THAN TOUGH TALK TO CONVINCE A TOUGH CUSTOMER.

There's a saying that goes: "If it sounds too good to be true, it probably is." So what's all this talk from food stores about who has the very lowest prices in town? You've probably already figured out that no store can truthfully guarantee you the lowest price on every single item every day of the week. Safeway doesn't claim to. But we can guarantee you when you shop at our stores in Magic Valley that we'll give you a good honest deal on your groceries. That means low everyday prices and weekly specials. You can check them yourself on the next two pages; and in our store, it also means more. Such as passing along manufacturer savings to you. Giving you the fast, friendly service you deserve--from bagging your groceries to carrying large orders to your car. And offering you quality foods, especially in the departments where it counts most--meats, produce and dairy. At Safeway, we'd rather promise you something we can deliver... something we'll keep right on offering you long after all this tough talk fades away.

AL: Yankees win sixth straight, gain on Jays

NEW YORK (AP) — In his 18th season, Joe Niekro has had his share of satisfying moments as a professional. But Tuesday night's victory outshone all the rest.

"It was the most emotional game of my entire life," said Niekro, 2-1, as he combined with Dave Righetti for a five-hitter.

American

The 40-year-old knuckler, who turns 41 next month, was referring to his father who still remains in critical condition in a Wheeling, West Va. hospital.

"I wanted to say to him, 'Go get 'em', in my own way. Yeah, it was my biggest game."

The victory also kept New York's pennant hopes alive. The Yankees picked up one full game on the Toronto Blue Jays who lost 6-1 to the Detroit Tigers. The Jays magic number is three.

"I guess people in this town are going to start talking about the Yankees again," said Yankee skipper Billy Martin. "This series and the upcoming one with Toronto are the biggest ones of the year."

They (Toronto) lose another one in Detroit," Martin nodded his head up and down and sipped on a cup of coffee. "All heck will break loss."

Martin said that Niekro's right leg had been throbbing all night. Niekro had previously damaged his shin.

"With all those left handers in the lineup," said Martin, "I figured it was time to make a switch. He'll have to wait a little longer to pitch his no-hitter."

The Yankees took a 1-0 lead in the first against Jamie Cocanower, 5-8. Rickey Henderson was hit by a pitch, took third on Dan Pasqua's single and scored on Dave Winfield's infield out.

New York added a run in the second on consecutive singles by Mike Pagliarulo, Willie Randolph and Bobby Meacham. The Yankees made it 3-0 in the third when Don Mattingly walked, took second on a single by Ron Hassey and then third and home on wild pitches by Cocanower.

Milwaukee scored a run in the fifth on Paul Householder's 10th home run, the first hit of the game off Niekro.

Pagliarulo's run-scoring hit in the eighth, a sacrifice fly by Meacham and a throwing error by Milwaker catcher Ted Simmons accounted for the final Yankee runs.

Detroit 6
Toronto 1

DETROIT (AP) — Darrell Evans hit two home runs to regain the American League lead as the Detroit Tigers beat Toronto 6-1 Tuesday night, slowing down the Blue Jays' championship express.

Frank Tanana, 11-14, scattered nine hits, struck out seven and walked one in notching his third complete game.

Evans' first homer, a solo shot in the first inning, was his 38th of the season.

Lou Whitaker singled off Doyle Alexander, 16-10, to start the Detroit third and rode home on Evans' 29th homer of the year.

Two Toronto errors and a wild pitch led to three insurance runs for Detroit in the seventh.

Whitaker started the rally with a single and Gary Lavelle came on for the Blue Jays. Whitaker went to third on a single by Evans. But Toronto right fielder Jesse Barfield threw the ball into the Tiger dugout trying to nip Whitaker at third, enabling Whitaker to trot home and Evans to advance to third.

Dennis Lamp took over for Toronto, Kirk Gibson then walked and as he stole second, catcher Ernie Whitt's throw sailed into center field for an error that allowed Evans to score and Gibson to take third. Gibson scored when Lamp uncorked a two-out wild pitch.

Boston 10
Baltimore 3

BALTIMORE (AP) — Bill Buckner, who drove in five runs, and Dwight Evans hit three-run homers Tuesday night to lead the Boston Red Sox to a 10-3 victory over the Baltimore Orioles.

Texas 4
Oakland 2

ARLINGTON, Texas (AP) — Jose Guzman pitched eight strong innings and Don Slaught had three hits and drove in two runs Tuesday night to help the Texas Rangers to a 4-2 victory over the Oakland A's.

Chicago 12
Minnesota 6

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — A pair of two-run homers by Ron Kittle and a three-run blow by Harold Baines powered a 15-hit attack Tuesday night to lead the Chicago White Sox to a 12-6 trashing of the Minnesota Twins.

Cleveland 9
Seattle 3

CLEVELAND (AP) — Andre Thornton snapped a sixth-inning tie with a two-run homer and Don Schulze ended a personal nine-game losing streak with seven innings of three-hit pitching Tuesday night as the Cleveland Indians defeated the Seattle Mariners 9-3.

Weaver, suspended for three games, accuses Brown of lying

BALTIMORE (AP) — After receiving a three-game suspension Tuesday from American League president Bobby Brown, Baltimore Orioles Manager Earl Weaver called it just "another case of dishonesty beating integrity."

"Lying always beats out the truth in this game," Weaver told reporters gathered in his clubhouse office 90 minutes before Tuesday's game with the Boston Red Sox.

"There's no such thing as integrity. Dishonesty is always rewarded," he said. "If the truth could keep us out of trouble, the people in charge of this game would tie to get us in it."

Weaver was ejected from the first game of Sunday's doubleheader at Yankee Stadium in the third inning after coming out of the dugout to argue with the umpire three times in as many innings.

He was also ejected from the second game, during the exchange of line-up cards, after which he dumped dirt on the shoes of the umpires, then snatched a stop watch from the hand of crew chief Jim Evans and threw it into the dugout.

"Between games, I found out through my players that (after the first ejection) Evans was hollering that he wanted to take me out to the parking lot and kick my butt," Weaver said. "I wanted to find out if Evans would admit saying it.

"Rich Dauer was the one who told me," Weaver said. "Just as the league president is going to tell you he believes his umpires, I believe my players. "Definitely," Weaver went on "because I've seen the other guy lie to me on numerous occasions. I wanted to prove to Dauer that Evans was a liar."

Weaver brought Dauer with him for the exchange of cards at the beginning of the second game. According to Weaver, Evans denied making the remark, and neither he (Weaver) nor Dauer was asked about the incident by Brown.

"The first paragraph is a lie," said Weaver of league's announcement of the suspension. "It says, 'I talked to Earl Weaver,' and it's true we did talk but it was only to try and set up an appointment to look at the films," the Orioles manager said.

NL: L.A guaranteed of tie for West championship

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The Los Angeles Dodgers clinched at least a tie for the National League West title Tuesday night as Mariano Duncan and Enos Cabell each drove home two runs in a five-run fourth inning during a 10-3 victory over the San Diego Padres.

One more Los Angeles triumph or one more loss by second-place Cincinnati will give the Dodgers the title. Los Angeles has five games remaining and the Reds have six left, including their final three at Dodger Stadium.

Los Angeles jumped on Dave Dravecky, 13-11, for eight runs on nine hits in his 3 1-3 innings. But Dodgers starter Rick Honeycutt also had problems, surrendering three runs on seven hits before exiting after 3⅔ innings.

Carlos Diaz, the third Los Angeles pitcher, worked five shutout innings for his sixth victory against three losses.

The Dodgers took a 3-0 lead in the first inning. Duncan led off with a single, took second on a groundout, stole third and came home on Bill Madlock's single.

After Pedro Guerrero singled, both runners advanced on catcher Bruce Bochy's passed ball. With two outs, Mike Scioscia lined a single to right to score both runners.

The Padres got one run back in the third on Jerry Royster's RBI single. The Dodgers made it 4-1 in the bottom of the third when Mike Marshall laced a run-scoring double.

Dravecky had an RBI triple in the fourth and scored on a single by Mario Ramirez to make it 4-3, but the Dodgers scored five times in the bottom half of the inning.

Los Angeles loaded the bases on a walk to Scioscia, Steve Sax's single and a bunt single by pinch-hitter Reggie Williams. Duncan then blooped a single to right to make it 6-3, chasing Dravecky.

Cabell greeted reliever Ed Wojna with a high hopper over third baseman Kurt Bevacqua's head for a two-run double, and Marshall added an RBI single.

Guerrero had an RBI single in the eighth.

San Francisco 6

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Eric Davis looped a two-run single to center field in the eighth inning to send Cincinnati ahead and the Reds beat the San Francisco Giants 7-6 tuesday to remain mathematically alive in the National League West pennant race.

Davis had three hits, including the game-winner off reliever Scott Garrelts, 5-5, and drove in four runs. The Reds loaded the bases in the eighth on Dave Concepcion's single, a walk to Bo Diaz and a bunt single by Ron Oester.

Dan Gladden drove in three San Francisco runs with a homer and triple. His two-run triple in the fourth broke a 3-3 tie and Mike Woodard followed with an RBI single to give the Giants a 6-3 lead against Cincinnati starter Andy McGaffigan, who retired the first two batters before giving up a single to Jose Uribe and walking pinch-hitter Chris Brown.

Tom Hume, 3-4, was the winning pitcher and John Franco earned his 11th save.

National

Both teams got two early runs on homers. Davis and Dave Parker homered in the first inning off Atlee Hammaker. Gladden hit a leadoff homer, his fifth, in the bottom of the first and Dan Driessen homered to open the Giants' second.

Parker's homer gave him a career-high 31 for the season. He hit 30 for the Pittsburgh Pirates in 1978 when he was the NL's Most Valuable Player.

The Reds got two runs off Jeff Robinson in the sixth, including one on an RBI single by Davis.

The loss was the Giants' 97th of the season, setting a San Francisco record. They lost 96 last year.

Houston 2
Atlanta 0

HOUSTON (AP) — Phil Garner and Dickie Thon drove in second-inning runs to back rookie Charlie Kerfeld's pitching and give the Astros a 2-0 victory Tuesday over the Atlanta Braves.

Kerfeld, 3-2, allowed four hits, struck out six and walked two in 8⅓ innings before Dave Smith took over and picked up his 26th save. Only one Atlanta runner reached as second against Kerfeld.

In the second, Alan Ashby drew a walk from Steve Bedrosian, 7-18, and scored on Garner's hit-and-run double to left-center field. Jim Pankovits also drew a walk before Thon sent Garner home with a single to left.

The victory gave the Astros a 79-78 record, including a final 44-37 mark in the Astrodome. The game drew an announced crowd of 2,600, giving the Astros a season-total attendance of 1,182,541 compared to last year's 1,229,861.

Chicago 4
Pittsburgh 3

CHICAGO (AP) — Leon Durham's tie-breaking home run in the second inning and Jody Davis' two-run shot in the fourth powered Reggie Patterson and the Chicago Cubs to a 4-3 victory Tuesday over the Pittsburgh Pirates.

Patterson, 2-0, scattered eight hits, allowed two runs, walked three batters and struck out two in 7⅔ innings. Jay Baller surrendered Mike Brown's leadoff homer in the eighth, then Lee Smith took over and earned his 33rd save. Rick Reuschel, who had won four in a row, gave up three hits, walked one and struck out six in seven innings and fell to 14-8.

The crowd of 3,446 was the Cubs' smallest of the season.

The Pirates got a first-inning run on singles by Joe Orsulak and Johnny Ray and Patterson's wild pitch. The Cubs tied it in the bottom of the inning when Bob Dernier singled and came around on a wild pitch, Ray's error on Shawon Dunston's grounder and Keith Moreland's forceout at second.

Durham's 21st home run of the year opened the second and the Cubs made it 4-1 in the fourth when Moreland walked and Davis hit his 17th homer, a shot to left field. Singles by Bream, R.J. Reynolds and Sam Khalifa gave the Pirates a run in the sixth.

NCAA, colleges condemn pay-play proposal

CHICAGO (AP) — University and NCAA officials Monday denounced a call for paying needy student athletes at major colleges, saying it would be too costly and would make student teams semi-professional.

University of Illinois Athletic Director Neale Stoner made the suggestion over the weekend, saying scholarships awarded to student athletes in Division I-A schools are inadequate and make it impossible for some recipients to live like other students.

"If you walk across campus, you'll find some of them don't even have 15 cents in their pockets," Stoner said.

"I really don't believe in pay for play," said Doug Single, athletic director at Northwestern University in suburban Evanston.

Single said the plan would not "cut down on the abuses of alumni" at some schools where student athletes reportedly have been paid large sums of money under the table to attend their institutions."

A better solution would be to revise NCAA regulations to allow student athletes to receive the same types of financial aid available to non-athletes, he said.

NCAA rules currently allow student athletes to receive only half the maximum $1,800 federal Pell grants and forbid their working, Single said.

The NCAA is not considering Stoner's pay-for-play proposal because it would give larger institutions an unfair recruiting advantage, said NCAA legal assistant Jamie McCloskey in a telephone interview from association headquarters in Mission, Kan.

A plan to pay athletes a monthly stipend of $20-$50 for "laundry money" was discussed at an NCAA convention last year, but failed to win support from member universities, McCloskey said.

"It would be very expensive. We're not moving in that direction," he said.

Opposition also came from Dean Stuck, special assistant in charge of intercollegiate athletics at Southern Illinois University in Carbondale.

"Once you start that (payments), where do you stop it?" Stuck said.

Tisdale's talk with Pacers broken off

WEST LAFAYETTE, Ind. (AP) — The Indiana Pacers continued their preseason training Tuesday without No.1 draft pick Wayman Tisdale, who returned to Oklahoma after his negotiations with the National Basketball Association team broke down.

Pro basketball

Team President Bob Salyers announced last Saturday that the team and the Oklahoma All-American had reached an agreement in principle on a contract.

However, Wayne Embry, Pacers vice president and consultant, said Monday night that a contract problem had arisen over "some legal wording."

"We have encountered some issues with certain terms of the contract," Salyers said.

"These were issues that we did not expect after reaching a verbal agreement. Obviously, we hope we can resolve this situation at the earliest possible date."

Tisdale took and passed his physical examination Monday morning in Indianapolis before leaving for Oklahoma after the contract impasse occurred.

Meanwhile Pacers trainer David Craig said he was told Tisdale was overweight when he reported for his physical.

"My understanding is that he is a little overweight and will need some conditioning," said Craig. "I have not seen Wayman and it would be premature for me to speculate about his condition at this point."

Los Angeles-based attorney Tom Collins, a consultant for Weldon Tisdale, Wayman's brother and agent, said Monday night that weight should not be of any major concern.

He said Wayman's playing weight was around 250 pounds and pointed out that Tisdale weighed 265 pounds when he reported for the U.S. Olympic Trials last year.

But Craig said that is too much weight for Tisdale's 6-foot-8 frame.

"If it turns out he's that much overweight ... well, I gotta believe he's got some work to do," Craig said. "I would think that's simply too much playing weight for him to carry."

Owner of 0-4 Bills dismisses coach Stephenson

KAY STEPHENSON
Living on borrowed time

By JOHN F. ONFATTI
The Associated Press

Pro football

ORCHARD PARK, N.Y. – Amid talk that "the franchise was in some jeopardy," the winless Buffalo Bills Tuesday fired Coach Kay Stephenson and hired assistant coach and defensive coordinator Hank Bullough as his replacement.

The dismissal came after Stephenson, who replaced Chuck Knox as head coach at the start of the 1983 season, compiled a 10-26 record, and as attendance at 80,000-seat Rich Stadium dropped to 45,000 for Sunday's game against the Vikings.

Team owner Ralph C. Wilson Jr. arrived at the stadium Tuesday to inform Stephenson and Bullough of a change that had been expected after the Bills finished with a National Football League-worst 2-14 record last season.

In fact, Wilson contacted former Cleveland Browns Coach Sam Rutigliano at the end of last season about taking the job before deciding to give Stephenson a second chance.

Stephenson was unavailable for comment.

"Kay Stephenson is a friend of mine and will remain a friend of mine, but we need to move in a new direction, and it can no longer wait," said Wilson in a prepared statement issued to the media.

Specifically, team General Manager Terry Bledsoe said, "I think it's fair to say he (Wilson) felt the franchise was in some jeopardy and the change had to be made for the sake of the franchise."

Bledsoe added, "You get into a losing habit and it's very hard to get out of."

Stephenson, who was the NFL's youngest head coach at age 38 when he took over the Bills, won plaudits for guiding an injury-riddled Buffalo team to an 8-8 record in his rookie year.

But after the team opened last season with 11 straight losses and paid assistant coaches in the NFL, then lost their last six games, a change was inevitable.

"I have every confidence that Hank Bullough can provide the kind of leadership and coaching experience and knowledge to correct our course and restore the reputation of Bills' football to its rightful place," read Wilson's statement.

The 51-year-old Bullough, who joined the team along with seven other new assistant coaches after last year, was to be head coach of the United States Football League's Pittsburgh Maulers in 1985, but the team folded before the season.

Bledsoe said Bullough, who was rumored to be one of the highest paid assistant coaches in the NFL, was not an interim coach and had a contract that went beyond the 1985 season.

"I have waited a long time for an opportunity to coach in the NFL," said Bullough, who added that he hated this opportunity ... with this situation (and) the way it happened, but it's happened and I can't do anything about it."

TCU

F.A. Dry but the scandal itself surfaced Sept. 19.

That morning, TCU Chancellor William Tucker encountered a reporter friend in downtown Fort Worth, and the two talked briefly of the recruiting controversies at Southern Methodist and Texas A&M.

"It's got to be a great time to have Mr. Clean in your camp," the reporter quipped, referring to third-year Coach Jim Wacker.

The chancellor smiled but observed rather solemnly that recruiting irregularities have become so pervasive that they're almost a fact of college life.

By nightfall, TCU was knee deep in a recruiting-payoff scandal that stunned fans and foes alike and torpeded the Frogs' well-chronicled and widely applauded rise to respectability.

And that was only the beginning.

On the afternoon of Sept. 19, following one of Wacker's "honesty and integrity" sermons, a player approached a TCU assistant and admitted that he and five others were receiving cash payments from an alumni slush fund. The revelation reportedly came from Davis, TCU's first concensus All-American since Bob Lilly and the player most responsible for leading the Horned Frogs out of football's dark ages.

Nicknamed the "Temple Tornado" to enhance his image in the eyes of Heisman Trophy voters, Davis was Saturday's hero last year as TCU won eight of its first nine games and flirted with a SWC title before season-ending losses to Texas and Texas A&M.

"Cinderella's a Frog," Wacker chortled during those heady times.

The Davis connection alone surely broke Wacker's heart. The two shared almost a father-son relationship.

A remorseful Davis would say later that his coach knew nothing of the payoffs and that he, Davis, took the cash only because it was available.

"The money was there ..." he said. "That's the biggest reason I took it. Because it was there."

Wacker talked with the six players before suspending them that evening, then notified Athletic Director Frank Windegger and Tucker.

The scandal not only crippled the offense but jettisoned five defensive starters as well: Egypt Allen, Gary Spann, Gearld Taylor, Darron Turner and Marvin Foster. It subsequently claimed a seventh player, reserve tight end Ron Zell Brewer.

Wacker later said that blowing the whistle on his own program was the toughest decision he had ever made.

"I'm very sick, disappointed as to what has happened, make no bones about that," he said. "A lot of people have been hurt. A great university has been hurt ...

"Even though I've had second thoughts and turmoil and not a lot of sleep the last four or five nights, when I come back to grips with reality, with life not only as it is but as it's supposed to be, I will promise you one thing:

"In 100,000 years I would never change that decision for one second."

With the campus and the conference still in a state of shock, Fort Worth oilman Dick Lowe identified himself as the administrator of the slush fund and also implicated former Coach Dry, now an assistant at Baylor.

In a letter of resignation from the university's board of trustees, Lowe, a former TCU football player, said the seeds of the slush fund were planted at a dinner meeting with Dry and two assistant coaches before the 1980 recruiting season.

In the letter, dated Sept. 29 and addressed to Tucker, Lowe wrote:

"At that dinner it was said by someone other than myself that everyone else in the conference was buying players and that the only way we could compete was to buy players also.

"The next day an assistant coach came to my office with two other alumni and a third joined us a little later to discuss methods and people to wrongfully recruit in competition with those already doing it.

"This meeting eventually led to a group to actually recruit the players and another that only supplied funds.

"The assistant coaches would collect the funds and distribute them to the wrongfully recruited players."

In an interview, Lowe said he asked Dry during the dinner meeting if he thought the payoffs were necessary to the recruiting program.

Bulls return to Wall Street

By JAMES F. PELTZ
The Associated Press

NEW YORK — The stock market greeted the fourth quarter with a strong rally in active trading Tuesday, lifting the Dow Jones industrials to their highest level in eight weeks.

Oil and transportation issues led the broad advance, which came in the heaviest trading since late July. Financial, drug and computer stocks also scored notable gains.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials jumped 12.32 to 1,340.95, its best level since standing at 1,346.89 on Aug. 5. The Dow Jones transportation average, fueled by gains among airline stocks, surged 13.11 to 653.68.

Gainers overall led losers by 5 to 2 on the New York Stock Exchange, whose composite index rose 1.58 to 106.77.

Big Board volume swelled to 130.24 million shares from 103.62 million in the previous session. It was Wall Street's busiest day since 143.63 million shares changed hands July 23.

Analysts attributed the upswing to several factors. The government's report Monday of a 0.7 percent August gain in its main gauge of future economic activity encouraged investors, as has the dollar's recent slide in international foreign exchange, they said.

The dollar fell sharply in late trading Tuesday, dropping to its lowest level in 17½ months against the currencies of its major trading partners.

Wall Street also was encouraged that investors again demanded some of the market's so-called leadership issues, such as International Business Machines, General Motors and the oil stocks, traders said. IBM rose 2¾ to 126⅝ and GM was up 1¼ at 68¼.

Short covering and buying programs launched by institutional investors also contributed to the market's strong tone, especially near the closing bell, they said. Short covering is the purchase of shares to replace stock that was previously borrowed and then sold in the hope its price would fall.

Finally, a flurry of takeover proposals and merger speculation also helped lead prices higher.

Oil stocks have rallied this week in response to recent increases in crude-oil market prices stemming from relatively low inventories and rising seasonal demand.

Exxon rose 1⅛ to 53, Mobil gained ⅞ to 30¼, Chevron was up 1¼ to 38¾ and Amoco jumped 3 to 68⅝.

Investors disregarded the prospect of higher fuel costs and bid up airline stocks. NWA, a rumored takeover target, led the group by climbing 3¼ to 51⅝. AMR rose 1 to 40½ and UAL was up 1⅛ at 48⅝.

Richardson-Vicks rose 4½ to 68 following a 10-point surge Monday. After the close, Richardson-Vicks, which has been fighting a takeover bid by Unilever, said it agreed to be acquired for $69 a share by Procter & Gamble, which fell ⅜ to 55⅝.

MidCon soared 10⅝ to 56¾ in heavy trading amid rumors it too is a takeover target.

Beatrice gained 1⅞ to 38⅞ and topped the NYSE's active list after announcing plans to divest four units, including Avis, the rental-car company it acquired when it purchased Esmark last year.

CBS jumped 6⅛ to 116⅝ after Loews, up 1⅛ to 44½, said it raised its stake in CBS to 11.1 percent from 9.9 percent.

Richardson-Vicks leaps to escape Unilever bid

WILTON, Conn. (AP) — Richardson-Vicks Inc. jumped into the friendly arms of Procter & Gamble Co. on Tuesday, agreeing to be bought up for $1.2 billion to escape a hostile takeover bid by Unilever.

The joint announcement said Procter & Gamble would soon begin a cash tender offer of $69 for each of Richardson-Vicks' common shares outstanding.

A spokesman for the American subsidiary of Unilever, the Anglo-Dutch consumer products giant, said the company had no immediate comment.

The agreement would make Richardson-Vicks a wholly owned subsidiary of Procter & Gamble, a leading maker of consumer products based in Cincinnati. Richardson-Vicks, which produces consumer health products, would keep its headquarters in Wilton, the announcement said.

As of Sept. 24, Richardson-Vicks had 17.7 million shares outstanding, which would make Procter & Gamble's offer worth $1.2 billion.

Procter & Gamble also was granted options, exercisable under certain circumstances, to buy an unspecified number of additional shares of Richardson-Vicks' stock from the company and to buy Richardson-Vicks' profitable Oil of Olay skin cream business.

Micron Technology profits plunge during fourth quarter, fiscal year

BOISE (AP) — Micron Technology Inc. has reported a dramatic decline in profits for its fiscal year and a $7.3 million loss for its fourth quarter, which ended Aug. 28.

The Boise-based semiconductor company, which laid off about 500 people earlier this year, said Monday its fiscal year net income was $200,000, or 1 cent a share, on revenues of $75.9 million. That was down from a net income of about $29 million, or 76 cents a share, on revenues of $87.4 million during the previous fiscal year.

During the fourth quarter, Micron reported a $7.3 million net loss, or 38 cents per share, on revenues of $6.2 million. That compares with a $10.9 million net income, or 60 cents a share, on revenues of $37.4 million a year earlier.

Micron, which previously announced that it expected to lose more than $7 million in its fourth quarter, attributed the decline in revenues and net income to a depressed market for its primary product, dynamic random access memory chips. DRAMs are widely used memory chips in personal computers.

The slumping market has reduced shipments and prices for its 64-kilobit DRAM chip, the company said. Micron also blamed costs that stemmed from its transition to a new chip — the 256-kilobit DRAM with error-correction coding — and development of another, higher-speed, 256-kilobit "Page-Mode" chip.

Few additional details on Micron's earnings were available from company officials, although Micron spokeswoman Nancy Blackburn said no more layoffs were planned. The company employs about 735 people.

Micron President Joseph Parkinson declined to comment because of litigation pending against Japanese competitors.

Micron officials have maintained the layoffs and losses incurred by the company and some other battered semiconductor companies stem in part from unfair Japanese competition.

Last month, Micron filed a $100 million antitrust lawsuit charging that six Japanese competitors conspired to force Micron from the semiconductor market.

The filing of the lawsuit followed a bad year for Micron, which once was one of the fastest-growing companies in the United States.

After it went public, with much fanfare, in June 1984, its stock jumped from a initial offering price of $14 to a high of $40 last fall. On Monday, the stock closed at $7 a share.

Small holders of telephone stock given chance to sell off shares

NEW YORK (AP) — American Telephone & Telegraph Co. said Tuesday it will offer the estimated 1.9 million shareowners with fewer than 100 shares of AT&T's common stock a chance to sell those shares without paying a sales fee.

The program, under which AT&T will arrange the sale of the stock rather than buy back stock directly, should result in lower recordkeeping costs, the company said. The program will begin Oct. 21 and be available through Dec. 17.

AT&T said about 1.9 million of its 3.2 million shareowners own fewer than 100 shares of AT&T common stock.

Their holdings amount to about 55 million shares, or about 5 percent of the company's outstanding total of about 1.06 billion shares, AT&T spokesman Dick Gray said.

He said the company currently estimates that about 10 percent to 20 percent of those eligible will participate in the program. If that estimate proves accurate, the company would save about $2 million to $3 million a year in record-keeping costs, he said.

The company plans to mail out details of the program to its shareowners beginning Oct. 21. Banks and brokerage firms also will be notified. The program will be available from that date until Dec. 17, the company said.

Virginia A. Dwyer, AT&T senior vice president-finance, said that since AT&T's divestiture of its local operating subsidiaries 17 months ago, some shareowners holding a relatively small number of AT&T shares have asked the company if there was some way the company could help them sell their shares in a convenient and inexpensive way.

"We value very highly the loyalty of all our shareowners," she said. "However, we also recognize that some have continued to keep an account open simply because of the cost or inconvenience associated with selling a small number of shares."

The proposed propgram would enable those shareowners to sell their holdings without incurring a sales fee, which otherwise could be a significant expense compared to the value of their shares, Miss Dwyer said.

Investigate service contract, company before signing up

Sylvia Porter

When you buy a big-ticket, costly item — a new home telephone system, a shiny new appliance — who repairs it when it unexpectedly breaks down?

What sort of protection do you have against an expensive disaster that you could not foresee?

At this point, a savvy buyer might reply: "A service contract," which in effect serves as an insurance policy should your fancy, expensive gadget, electronic gear, car or the like, break down.

And a service contract may, in fact, be just what you need. But before you sign up, you must investigate both the services offered and the company's reputation. You can pay more for a service contract than you ever would for repairs during an item's normal life.

The formula used to determine the cost of a contract assumes you will subject the product to the roughest possible use and will not maintain it in good shape either. Add to that a profit margin, emphasizes the Council of Better Business Bureaus.

Since most products are not designed for this kind of heavy use — even abuse — a service contract makes sense only if that is the treatment your new gadget will get.

But if you expect to use the item in a normal way — and you might ask different sellers what "normal use" means — you may be better off to pay for normal repairs or maintenance out of your own pocket.

Read the warranty thoroughly, too, before you buy a contract. You well may find that you already have protection from the manufacturer for many, if not all, the events a service contract will cover.

It may make sense, therefore, to buy a service contract only after the warranty expires.

Few states have any requirements about the amount of assets a service contract company has to have in order to operate. It may shock you to learn that the federal government has none.

This stresses why you must be on guard, especially when dealing with private or independent service contract companies.

There are basically two different kinds of providers: manufacturers and independents (or third parties). Independents offer lower prices as a rule, but at slightly greater risk to you. A few rules to guide you through the maze of service:

- Ask for references from the company and get background information from a local consumer agency or Better Business Bureau before you sign anything. Study all information with care.
- Find out exactly what the contract covers. Does it pay for repairs on the entire product, or just on some parts or systems? How long does the contract last? Do you have to bring the product to an authorized service center or repair facility, or will you be able to get the service you need at home?
- Is routine maintenance and preventive work important? Will you need it? Depending on the item and contract, you may not have coverage.
- Familiarize yourself with the deductible. As with insurance, many service contracts require that you pay a deductible before your coverage comes into play. And the cost of the deductible well may cover a routine repair.
- Does your contract require an annual deductible or a deductible per repair? Check.
- Can you transfer the contract to another owner? This kind of service contract for your car, for instance, could add to its resale value.
- Find out if your contract pays for a substitute item while yours undergoes repair. Important advantage.
- Investigate how long it will take to get an item fixed. An acquaintance on Long Island had to wait four days to have her phone system repaired this past summer. Reason: vacation season.

Service contracts work well for most consumers. But the danger is high-pressure sales tactics designed to force you to buy what you don't really need or even want. Beware. Think hard first. And then, and only then, buy.

'Classic' leads new formula across U.S., magazine says

NEW YORK (AP) — Coca-Cola Classic is outselling the reformulated Coca-Cola "hands down in almost all markets across the U.S.," the trade magazine Advertising Age reported Monday.

"In some markets, Coca-Cola Classic, which is the new name for the original formula Coke, is outselling the reformulated brand by 9-to-1," the magazine said.

Advertising Age said its staff surveyed 23 Coke bottlers across the country, including the top five Coke bottlers in terms of unit volume. Richard L. Gordon, Advertising Age's managing editor, said the bottlers surveyed account for well over half of Coke's retail sales, excluding fountain sales.

The magazine said only one bottler surveyed, Coca-Cola Bottlers of Detroit, reported new Coke outselling Coca-Cola Classic.

Demand for the original formula appears strongest in the Southwest, Advertising Age said. In Dallas, the bottlers estimated there are 85 Classic Coke drinkers to 15 new-Coke drinkers, while in Houston the old formula is outselling the new by 3-to-1, the magazine said.

Last April, Coca-Cola Co. announced it was changing its 99-year-old formula for Coke. But within weeks after introducing the "new" Coke, the company bowed to consumers' demand for the old formula.

On July 10 the company announced it would bring back the original formula, renamed Classic Coke, and sell it along with the new version.

Carlton Curtis, a spokesman at Coca-Cola's headquarters in Atlanta, declined specific comment on Advertising Age's survey and would not say whether one brand of Coke was outselling the other.

However, he said July-August unit sales of its "sugar-cola category" — Coke, Coca-Cola Classic and the recently introduced Cherry Coke — were up 10 percent from a year earlier, compared with an industry growth rate averaging between 4 percent and 5 percent per year.

Before the newly formulated Coke and Cherry Coke arrived, he said, Coca-Cola's sugar-cola category consisted of only the original formula Coke, and unit sales were growing about 2 percent a year.

"The primary objective of introducing the new-tasting Coke was to reinvigorate that segment," Curtis said. "That objective is being achieved. It's nice to have people arguing about which of our products they're buying."

Advertising Age said a separate survey found that the public generally is not confused about the difference between old and new Coke.

A study of more than 1,000 adult consumers, taken by R.H. Bruskin Associates of New Brunswick, N.J., found that among "heavy and moderate Coke drinkers, only 6 percent were confused, compared with 8 percent of light drinkers and 26 percent of non-Coke drinkers," the magazine said.

Overall, about 87 percent of those consumers surveyed were aware that Classic Coke is the old formula, it said.

Chill may have harmed spud crop

IDAHO FALLS (AP) — Sunday night's unseasonably cold weather in eastern Idaho may have produced slight damage to the potato crop, said John Ojala, University of Idaho extension potato specialist in Idaho Falls.

"It's possible that we have slight damage," but the biggest effect of the unseasonably cool weather is a change in harvest hours, he said.

Digging of potatoes should wait until the temperature of the tuber pulp is 45 degrees, he said, and in most areas of eastern Idaho that isn't occurring now until 11 a.m. or noon. That temperature is staying up, however, until 10 or 11 p.m., he said.

"It's a shift in their working hours," he said. "They can't start at 8 in the morning and work until 8 or so at night," he said.

Potatoes harvested at lower temperatures tend to bruise easily, he said.

Soil temperatures follow air temperatures, but don't change as fast and are generally a few hours behind air temperatures, Ojala said.

Overnight lows in eastern Idaho included 15 at Ashton, 16 at Fort Hall, and 17 at Parker. The temperature of the soil 4 inches below the surface at those three cities were 37, 30 and 34, respectively.

Growers who feel they have frozen potatoes may stop harvesting for a few days to be sure, Ojala said. Waiting allows any frozen potatoes to begin deteriorating, which will make them easy to see and remove before they are stored and affect the quality of others in the pile, he said.

"At this point it may slow them down a little bit in the mornings," Bonneville County Agent Greg Van Doren said of the low temperatures.

But he and others who are watching the harvest say soil temperatures haven't been low enough for a long enough period to have a major effect on the crop.

He estimates that about one-fifth of the potato crop has been harvested in Bonneville County.

The chilly weather is further delaying harvest that was postponed by cool, wet weather earlier this month in the Upper Snake River Valley, said Fremont County Agent Tim Herrman.

That moisture had delayed vine killing, he said.

Some growers who began harvesting last week have stopped to allow potato skins to toughen, he said.

Gas company seeks sales in California

VANCOUVER, British Columbia (AP) — Westcoast Transmission Co. Ltd. is seeking government permission to sell natural gas on the spot market in the United States, a move that could pump more than $100 million (U.S.) annually into the British Columbia economy.

Art Willms, Westcoast senior vice-president, says a U.S. subsidiary has received American clearance to import as much as 50 billion cubic feet of gas a year for two years.

Westcoast plans to sell its gas in the California market where spot prices are about $2.50 (U.S.) per thousand cubic feet at the California border.

Willms said it would cost about 60 cents (U.S.) to transport the gas which would mean Westcoast would sell on the spot market for about $2 a thousand cubic feet.

He said spot market gas sales would not pull Westcoast's total export sales below the official floor price which varies but is about $3 (U.S.) a thousand cubic feet.

Westcoast sells on long-term contract to Northwest Energy of Salt Lake City.

Willms said an application to the Canadian National Energy Board seeks to amend Westcoast's contract with Northwest Energy to allow Northwest to sell on the spot market to California.

The gas would ultimately be distributed by the Southern California Gas Co., which services customers in the Los Angeles area.

'Classic' leads new formula across U.S., magazine says

NEW YORK (AP) — Coca-Cola Classic is outselling the reformulated Coca-Cola "hands down in almost all markets across the U.S.," the trade magazine Advertising Age reported Monday.

In some markets, Coca-Cola Classic, which is the new name for the original formula Coke, is outselling the reformulated brand by 9-to-1, the magazine said.

Advertising Age said its staff surveyed 23 Coke bottlers across the country, including the top five Coke bottlers in terms of unit volume. Richard L. Gordon, Advertising Age's managing editor, said the bottlers surveyed account for well over half of Coke's retail sales, excluding fountain sales.

The magazine said only one bottler surveyed, Coca-Cola Bottlers of Detroit, reported new Coke outselling Coca-Cola Classic.

Demand for the original formula appears strongest in the Southwest, Advertising Age said. In Dallas, the bottlers estimated there are 85 Classic Coke drinkers to 15 new Coke drinkers; while in Houston the old formula is outselling the new by 3-to-1, the magazine said.

Last April, Coca-Cola Co. announced it was changing its 99-year-old formula for Coke. But within weeks after introducing the "new" Coke, the company bowed to consumers' demand for the old formula.

On July 10 the company announced it would bring back the original formula, renamed Classic Coke, and sell it along with the new version.

Carlton Curtis, a spokesman at Coca-Cola's headquarters in Atlanta, declined specific comment on Advertising Age's survey and would not say whether one brand of Coke was outselling the other.

However, he said July-August unit sales of its "sugar-cola category" — Coke, Coca-Cola Classic and the recently introduced Cherry Coke — were up 10 percent from a year earlier, compared with an industry growth rate averaging between 4 percent and 5 percent per year.

Before the newly formulated Coke and Cherry Coke arrived, he said, Coca-Cola's sugar-cola category consisted of only the original formula Coke, and unit sales were growing about 2 percent a year.

"The primary objective of introducing the new-tasting Coke was to reinvigorate that segment," Curtis said. "That objective is being achieved. It's nice to have people arguing about which of our products they're buying."

Advertising Age said a separate survey found that the public generally is not confused about the difference between old and new Coke.

A study of more than 1,000 adult consumers, taken by R.H. Bruskin Associates of New Brunswick, N.J., found that among "heavy and moderate Coke drinkers, only 6 percent were confused, compared with 8 percent of light drinkers and 26 percent of non-Coke drinkers," the magazine said.

Overall, about 87 percent of those consumers surveyed were aware that Classic Coke is the old formula, it said.

Chill may have harmed spud crop

IDAHO FALLS (AP) — Sunday night's unseasonably cold weather in eastern Idaho may have produced slight damage to the potato crop, said John Ojala, University of Idaho extension potato specialist in Idaho Falls.

"It's possible that we have slight damage," but the biggest effect of the unseasonably cool weather is a change in harvest hours, he said.

Digging of potatoes should wait until the temperature of the tuber pulp is 45 degrees, he said, and in most areas of eastern Idaho that isn't occurring now until 11 a.m. or noon. That temperature is staying up, however, until 10 or 11 p.m., he said.

"It's a shift in their working hours," he said. "They can't start at 8 in the morning and work until 8 or so at night," he said.

Potatoes harvested at lower temperatures tend to bruise easily, he said.

Soil temperatures follow air temperatures, but don't change as fast and are generally a few hours behind air temperatures, Ojala said.

Overnight lows in eastern Idaho included 15 at Ashton, 16 at Fort Hall, and 17 at Parker. The temperature of the soil 4 inches below the surface at those three cities were 37, 30 and 34, respectively.

Growers who feel they have frozen potatoes may stop harvesting for a few days to be sure, Ojala said. Waiting allows any frozen potatoes to begin deteriorating, which will make them easy to see and remove before they are stored and affect the quality of others in the pile, he said.

"At this point it may slow them down a little bit in the mornings," Bonneville County Agent Greg Van Doren said of the low temperatures.

But, he and others who are watching the harvest say soil temperatures haven't been low enough for a long enough period to have a major effect on the crop.

He estimates that about one-fifth of the potato crop has been harvested in Bonneville County.

The chilly weather is further delaying harvest that was postponed by cool, wet weather earlier this month in the Upper Snake River Valley, said Fremont County Agent Tim Herrman.

That moisture had delayed vine killing, he said.

Some growers who began harvesting last week have stopped to allow potato skins to toughen, he said.

Gas company seeks sales in California

VANCOUVER, British Columbia (AP) — Westcoast Transmission Co. Ltd. is seeking government permission to sell natural gas on the spot market in the United States, a move that could pump more than $100 million (U.S.) annually into the British Columbia economy.

Art Willms, Westcoast senior vice-president, says a U.S. subsidiary has received American clearance to import as much as 50 billion cubic feet of gas a year for two years.

Westcoast plans to sell its gas in the California market where spot prices are about $2.50 (U.S.) per thousand cubic feet at the California border.

Willms said it would cost about 60 cents (U.S.) to transport the gas which would mean Westcoast would sell on the spot market for about $2 a thousand cubic feet.

He said spot market gas sales would not pull Westcoast's total export sales below the official floor price which varies but is about $3 (U.S.) a thousand cubic feet.

Westcoast sells on long-term contract to Northwest Energy of Salt Lake City.

Willms said an application to the Canadian National Energy Board seeks to amend Westcoast's contract with Northwest Energy to allow Northwest to sell on the spot market to California.

The gas would ultimately be distributed by the Southern California Gas Co., which services customers in the Los Angeles area.

THE ACES® BOBBY WOLFF

"Blessed are they who have nothing to say and who cannot be persuaded to say it."
James Russell Lowell.

"We would have beaten the game if you had held my diamond king," proclaimed West. This marked the second time he had missed the winning defense.

South refused two spades and won West's five (suit preference) with his ace. A diamond went to dummy's nine and East's jack, and East returned a club. South won his ace, refused to finesse, and led another diamond. West's king appeared and South claimed his nine tricks (five diamonds, two hearts, a spade and a club). Where did the defense go wrong?

When South leads the first diamond, West must hop up with his king. South cannot refuse to win since West's spades will run, so he wins dummy's ace. But now dummy's diamonds are isolated. South can win only two diamonds and must fall back on the club finesse. This fails as expected and the game goes down two tricks.

West has nothing to lose by playing his diamond king early. If a simple finesse were needed to score the game, South could be counted on to find that play.

Spicy flavors appeal in fall

Tex-Mex flair lights party

The lively flavors of Tex-Mex cooking are particularly appealing these nippy fall days.

Subtle, spicy and spectacular, these foods strike a unique compromise between authentic Mexican specialities and the time pressures of busy American cooks. With emphasis on exciting flavors, easy preparation and the elimination of hard-to-find ingredients, they're a natural for casual entertaining.

Next time the party's at your house have Picante Pork Enchiladas star on the fiesta menu. The spicy ground pork-filled tortillas have a garden-fresh sauce that's a shortcut version of a Mexican classic. Authentic flavor is provided by choice of mild, medium or hot picante sauce, which eliminates tedious preparation of fresh or dried chilies.

For taste and temperature contrasts that provide part of the charm of Tex-Mex foods, serve a variety of toppings with the enchiladas. Avocado slices, additional picante sauce and Olive-Tomato Relish are ideal.

Combining cool, crisp vegetables with California black ripe olives in a spicy marinade, the relish makes a pleasing accompaniment to full-flavored foods.

No Tex-Mex meal is complete without beans in some form. Whether served refried, as a dip or as a salad, they're a border state menu must. Bean and Pepper Salad combines the best of the Southwest in a zesty salad with a lime vinaigrette. Convenient canned or cooked dry kidney, pinto or pink beans, grown in California and Idaho, team with peppers, jicama and chiles for a spicy/tangy palate pleasing combo.

Or try Bean and Cheese Crispy appetizers, a tostada-like treat that tops seasoned cooked mashed beans with colorful, flavorful Mexican-style garnishes.

OLIVE-TOIMATO RELISH

1 cup pitted California ripe olives, drained
2 ripe tomatoes, seeded and chopped
1 medium zucchini, chopped
⅓ cup chopped onion
⅓ cup chopped celery
¼ cup olive oil or vegetable oil
1 tablespoon red wine vinegar
1 small clove garlic, minced
1 mild green chile, chopped
½ teaspoon salt
¼ teaspoon pepper

Toss together olives, tomatoes, zucchini, onion and celery. In small jar combine oil, vinegar, garlic, chile, salt and pepper; cover and shake until well blended. Drizzle dressing over olive relish; mix well. Cover and chill at least 2 hours or up to 24 hours, stirring occasionally. Drain before serving. Makes 5 to 6 servings.

CHEESE AND CHICKEN CHIMICHANGAS

2½ cups shredded or chopped cooked chicken
⅔ cup Pace picante sauce
⅓ cup green onion slices
¾ to 1 teaspoon ground cumin
½ teaspoon oregano leaves, crushed
½ teaspoon salt
8 flour tortillas (7 to 8 inches)
¼ cup melted margarine
1 cup shredded cheddar or monterey jack cheese
Guacamole (recipe follows)

Combine chicken, picante sauce, onion, cumin, oregano and salt in saucepan; simmer 5 minutes or until most of liquid has evaporated. Brush one side of tortillas with margarine. Spoon about ⅓ cup meat mixture onto center of unbuttered sides; top with 2 tablespoons cheese. Fold 2 sides over filling; fold ends down.

Place seam side down in 13 by 9 by 2-inch baking dish. Bake in preheated oven at 475 degrees F. about 13 minutes or until crisp and golden brown.

GUACAMOLE

1 ripe avocado, peeled, seeded and mashed
2 tablespoons picante sauce
1 teaspoon lemon juice
Salt to taste

Combine all ingredients; mix well. Makes about 1 cup.

BEAN AND PEPPER SALAD

1 can (about 16 oz.) kidney beans, drained*
1 can (about 16 oz.) pinto beans, drained*
½ cup very thinly sliced red onion, separated into rings
½ cup red or green pepper strips
1 cup thinly julienned jicama
¼ cup very thinly sliced green chiles (Anaheim)
Lime vinaigrette (recipe follows)
Lettuce cups or shredded lettuce

Combine all ingredients except lettuce; mix well. Marinate at least 2 hours. Drain salad; reserve marinade. Serve on lettuce with reserved marinade. Makes about 8 servings.

*Three to three and a half cups drained, cooked kidney, pinto and pink beans may be substituted.

LIME VINAIGRETTE

2 tablespoons lime juice
2 tablespoons white wine vinegar

'Oodles of Noodles' celebrates pasta Oct. 6-12

HAILEY — To help celebrate National Pasta Week, Oct. 6-12, a special program called "Oodles of Noodles" will be presented in Gooding, Shoshone, Carey and Hailey.

Sponsored by the University of Idaho Cooperative Extension Service, the hands-on workshop will teach participants how to make three different varieties of pasta, such as plain, spinach, and a vegetable pasta, said Gretchen Sutton, Blaine/Lincoln County Home Economist.

"The program is designed to add some different ingredients into your diet," Sutton said, "and it is not expensive to make."

She added that pasta cannot be thought in terms of just fettucini, lasagna and spaghetti anymore. For example, she has a recipe for chocolate pasta that uses bittersweet chocolate to make a cone-shaped desert topped with whipping cream.

The class will work in groups to make the pastas and then share their cooking at a luncheon afterward.

The class will be held Oct. 8 at the Gooding City Hall at 10 a.m., and will also be held the same day in Shoshone at the Catholic Parish Hall at 3 p.m.

Oct. 16 the class will be held in Hailey at 10 a.m. at a yet-to-be-determined location, and again in Carey at the LDS Church at 2 p.m.

Participants should bring an apron and $1 registration fee to the class. Pre-registration is required by calling either 934-4401, 886-2406 or 788-3451.

Despite variety of store cookies, kids prefer mom's

Nancy Joy Jones
Valley cooking

Reunions are fun, and yet kind of scary, too. You never quite know who is going to come back, and what on earth will you talk to them about? After all, it's been 25 years . . .

Well, it wasn't that bad. In fact, everyone looked much younger than I thought they would. The morning of a reunion is an awful time to get in a game of to-tell-the-truth with your mirror. Even my standard, "Mirror, mirror on the wall, if I'm the fairest of them all, don't answer!" did nothing to uplift my spirits.

You don't really know how to start the conversations. First, you check to see if they are still married to the person you remember (most were). Then, you ask if they're still in the same career (most fellows, yes; most gals, however, had new avocations). In fact, most had pretty much paralleled our life, i.e. busy with career and child rearing.

I think the 10th or 15th year reunions were the most traumatic. There were those who returned the envy of everyone else: the guy that made the quick million (who graduated, for gosh sake, way behind you) and the gal that got the nose job, lost 50 pounds and wore a tiny, red miniskirt dress (when the skirt lengths were shoetop high). All this when you were struggling to get enough together for a down payment on a house, keep the peditrician paid and lose 20 pounds since your last pregnancy.

The 25th was a snap compared to the earlier ones. And since this was friend husband's reunion, we get to do it again next year for my class. I just hope we don't have to wait until the 50th to get together again with some of those we renewed aquaintances with at this one.

And I hope they forward on the recipes they promised, so I can pass them on to you.

Have you noticed the shelf space in the supermarkets that are taken up with cookies? I couldn't believe the varieties. I was tempted to purchase some for the kids at college because of a time crunch but couldn't find their favorites in packages so it was kitchen duty again.

Each have a particular "special" one, and thought I'd share those recipes with you this week. One recipe I know I have not given you yet is this one for Buttermilk Brownies. It came from Aunt Marj a few years ago. It makes a bunch, as you use a jellyroll pan. Prepare it ahead by greasing it and preheat your oven to 400 degrees.

BUTTERMILK BROWNIES

2 cups sugar
2 cups flour
4 tablespoons cocoa
1 cup cold water
½ cup margerine
½ cup salad oil
½ cup buttermilk
2 eggs
1 teaspoon baking soda

Sift the sugar, flour and cocoa together. In a small saucepan or in a bowl in your microwave bring water, margarine and salad oil to boil. Pour over the dry ingredients and beat until creamy.

Add the buttermilk, baking soda and eggs and mix well. Pour into prepared jellyroll pan and bake 18 minutes.

After removing from the oven and allowing to cool a bit, frost with this mixture.

½ cup butter
⅓ cup buttermilk
1 box (1-pound) powdered sugar
½ teaspoon vanilla
chopped nuts (optional)

Bring the butter, cocoa and buttermilk to a boil and add the powdered sugar and vanilla and beat well. Spread on top of brownies and sprinkle with chopped nuts. Cut into rectangles.

SNICKERDOODLES

½ cup soft shortening
½ cup butter
1½ cups sugar
2 eggs
2¾ cups sifted flour
2 teaspoons cream of tartar
1 teaspoon baking soda
¼ teaspoon salt
2 tablespoons sugar
2 teaspoons ground cinnamon

Mix thoroughly the shortening, butter, 1½ cups sugar and eggs until

Female physician cooks lo-fat meals

By JOAN BEAN
Times-News correspondent

TWIN FALLS — Because juggling a profession with motherhood is not easy, Dr. Lois Adrian works only part-time. She says both are worth it and wouldn't think of giving up either one.

"I just think you can't have two full-time jobs — 24-hour-a-day jobs, basically — and at the same time do them both well," she says.

"That would be impossible. Working part-time makes things much better around here."

She does have household help, but just as other moms do, she changes diapers and enjoys caring for her children.

When it comes to her medical practice, Dr. Adrian is equally enthusiastic. "In a way, you never know what you can expect, and there's always something new that comes up — new problems, new challenges — and that certainly makes it interesting. It doesn't get old and boring," she says.

On days when she works in the afternoon, dinner is started before she comes home. When time allows, Adrian does her own cooking and tries to keep it light.

"One of my big things is trying to kind of cut down on cholesterol and fats that we eat. I think that is one of the major problems of the American diet in general," she says.

"The latest recommendations from the surgeon general has been to cut down on fat, even beginning at age 2, so it's not just for people who are 50, overweight, smoke and have high blood pressure, and they start having heart trouble."

Her family eats more chicken and seafood than red meat. "We eat lamb and beef, too. It's not that we don't eat those, but I just try to do less of these," she says.

On one occasion, Adrian prepared salmon and rice, rolled up in lettuce leaves. The recipe did not call for mayonnaise, and she was pleased there was almost no fat in it at all.

But, because it tasted dry and bland, her husband, Dr. Barton Adrian, added his own mayonnaise. "Those things are a little too radical and don't go over very big," she says.

More women enter restaurant celebrity chef field

By TOWN & COUNTRY

A woman's place traditionally was supposed to be in the kitchen — but today a determined group of American women are taking their place as the celebrity chefs of restaurant kitchens.

Talented women chefs, according to the October issue of Town & Country, are running their own professional kitchens and are destined to contribute as much to the development of cooking in this country as their male counterparts.

The women chefs, self-confident professionals often in their 20s or 30s, generally do not cook the simple, lusty dishes often associated with women cooks, but prefer the "new American cuisine." Most importantly, they know how to cook.

Many women chefs abandoned careers in other fields because of their passion for gastronomy. Leslee Reis, chef at Cafe Provencal in Evanston, Ill., was a medical researcher at a university laboratory. Pamela Grosscup of Cuisines in Cleveland, planned to be a concert pianist. Lynn Vaccari, second in command at New York's fashionable Le Cirque, once studied cartography.

Few of these women have had problems adapting to the male-oriented profession where physical strength and a sense of authority are prerequisites for success.

"Quite frankly, it never dawned on me I might have trouble in this field just because I'm a woman," said Zarela Martinez, who once cooked for President Reagan at an economic summit and now runs the kitchen at Cafe Marimba in New York.

Joyce Goldstein, chef-owner of Square One in San Francisco, said, "Nothing infuriates me more than to hear that women are too timid or weak or emotional for this business."

She finds nothing wrong with asking her male coworkers to help with heavy jobs. She also thinks "women in our business are more driven than men, more determined to prove their endurance, more able to cope — just as in other aspects of their lives."

Kathleen Venezia, now at the Hotel Bel-Air in Los Angeles, had trouble when she studied at the Ecole Hoteliere in Paris.

"The men often tried to intimidate and humiliate me," she said, "screaming and yelling when I made mistakes, sending me off on silly errands and wondering out loud what I was doing there."

The job can be a demanding one.

"Who has time to play?" asked Lydia Shire, a divorced mother of three who is executive chef at Boston's Seasons restaurant. "I clock 12 to 14 hours a day, six days a week, and more often than not I spend my day off reading cookbooks and trying to come up with new ideas."

"I love men," said Amy Ferguson of Hawaii's Kona Village, "but few can understand what my running romance with food is all about and why I have so little time to go out and kick up my heels."

On the other hand, Elizabeth Terry of Elizabeth's on 37th in Savannah lives with her family over the restaurant and has enticed her husband and children into helping to run it.

"The restaurant has really solidified my family," she said.

Proof that the number of women chefs is growing can be found at The Culinary Institute of America at Hyde Park, N.Y., which has graduated 675 women chefs in the past three years — about 25 percent of the school's graduates.

Amy Ferguson summed up the field for James Villas in Town & Country, saying:

"It's true that 10 years ago females embarking on a professional cooking career had real problems.

"Today, on the other hand, women chefs in America are proud and ambitious and determined. These women can have the world at their feet so long as they are well-trained, strong and honest with themselves and the public."

Butterscotch, coffee flavors mingle in this tasty pudding

The Associated Press

BUTTERSCOTCH COFFEE PUDDING

¼ cup cornstarch
2½ cups skim milk
¼ cup cold strong coffee
3 tablespoons cold water
2 tablespoons butter
1 teaspoon vanilla

Stir together ½ cup of the sugar and the cornstarch; gradually stir in ½ cup of the milk and the coffee, keeping smooth; reserve. In a saucepan stir together remaining sugar and water; over moderate heat, stirring often, bring to a boil. Without stirring, boil until mixture is a heavy syrup and looks amber color — about 10 minutes. Over moderately low heat gradually stir in remaining milk, pouring it near side of pan. Continue cooking, stirring constantly, until syrup and milk are blended. Stir in reserved cornstarch mixture. Stirring constantly over moderate heat, boil until as thick as mayonnaise. Off heat. Stir in butter and vanilla. Turn into individual bowls. Refrigerate, covered, to set. Makes six ½-cup servings.

fluffy. Sift together the flour, cream of tartar, soda and salt and then mix into the first mixture.

Mix the 2 tablespoons of sugar with the cinnamon in a shallow bowl.

Roll the cookie dough into balls, about the size of large walnuts. Then roll the balls in the sugar-cinnamon mixture and place about 3 inches apart on an ungreased cookie sheet. Bake at 400 degrees until lightly browned but soft, about 8 to 10 minutes. (Note: this is one recipe that I really enjoy using the new air-cushioned cookie sheet with). It makes about 5 dozen.

This next recipe is really great this time of year. It makes super treats for the neighbor kids when they come trick-or-treating. If you have budding cooks at home, it's a good one to ease them into baking cookies to decorate for the other holidays.

CHARLIE BROWN'S GREAT PUMPKIN COOKIES

4 cups unsifted all purpose flour
2 cups quick or old-fashioned oats, uncooked
2 teaspoons baking soda
2 teaspoons ground cinnamon
½ teaspoon salt
1½ cups margarine, softened
2 cups firmly packed brown sugar
1 cup granulated sugar
1 egg
1 teaspoon vanilla extract
1 can (16 ounce size) solid pack pumpkin
1 cup semi-sweet morsels or raisins (or both!)

Have assorted icings, candies, raisins, nuts and peanut butter ready for decorating.

Preheat oven to 350 degrees. Lightly grease cookie sheet.

Combine the flour, oats, soda, cinnamon, and salt and set aside. Cream the butter and gradually add the sugars and beat until fluffy. Add egg and vanilla and mix thoroughly.

Alternate adding portions of the dry mixture and pumpkin to the butter-sugar mixture, mixing well after each addition. Stir in the chocolate morsels or the raisins.

For each cookie use about ¼ cup of dough. Drop it onto the cookie sheet and flatten into a pumpkin shape using a metal spatula (grease it first). You can add a bit more dough to the top like a pumpkin stem.

Bake for 20 to 25 minutes until firm and lightly browned. After cooling them, let your imagination go and decorate them with all sorts of faces using the candies, etc. This makes about 32 good-sized cookies and are great if you are Halloween room mom this year.

Enjoy!

Adrian

She wants her children, Benjamin, 4, and Carmel, 2, to eat a well-balanced diet and to learn to like a variety of foods. Her son does fine in this regard, but Carmel has a sweet tooth.

"I think she got it from her mother," she says. "I think she would just live on candy and chocolate and ice cream all day, if she was given a choice, so she needs a little bit more encouragement to eat other foods."

Adrian doesn't cut the sugar down much in her recipes, saying, if she is going to eat a dessert, she wants it "nice and good and sweet and rich." Otherwise, she would rather have fresh peaches.

While Adrian and her husband were in residency, they both cooked. He occasionally does it now and also enjoys canning. The doctors have a recipe for canned apple or peach pie filling that is nice to have in the winter. They found it in the Times-News, four years ago, shortly after their arrival in Twin Falls.

CANNED APPLE OR PEACH PIE FILLING

9 cups water
5 cups sugar
1 cup cornstarch
¼ teaspoon nutmeg
2 teaspoons cinnamon
¼ teaspoon cloves (omit for peach)
½ teaspoon almond extract (omit for peach)
1 cup cold water
¼ teaspoon salt
3 tablespoons lemon juice

Fill seven quart jars with peeled, sliced apples or peaches. In a large kettle, bring the 9 cups of water to a boil with 4 cups sugar. Mix 1 cup sugar and the remaining ingredients together. Stir into the boiled liquid. Cook until clear, about 3 to 5 minutes. "Fresh-Fruit" (the powder which keeps fruit from turning brown) may be added to this, but Adrian doesn't use it. Pour over apples or peaches. Leave 1½" headspace. Place lids, and process 25 minutes in boiling water bath.

Adrian has found a good way to measure shortening or peanut butter. "Say you need ⅔ cup — I find it's easier to fill a one cup measuring cup with ⅓ cup water, and then put the peanut butter in. When it gets up to 1 cup, then pour off the water, and you've got ⅔ cup. It's easier than trying to squish it down to get it even to the ⅔ cup measure," she says.

For her birthday, Adrian's favorite cake is chocolate butter cream torte. She says it really is good, but not one to eat every day.

CHOCOLATE BUTTER CREAM TORTE

Beat four eggs in a double boiler. Add 1 cup sugar, and cook over medium heat, beating until thick. Add 6 ounces chocolate chips and ¾ cup butter. Let cool.

Cut two white cake layers horizontally, with a knife or dental floss. Or, bake your two-layer cake recipe in four pans.

Put filling between each of the four layers and on top. Little dabs of whipped cream may be added, if desired.

Accountant questions whether refunding is worth the cost

By MARTIN SLOANE
United Feature Syndicate

Dear Martin — I am an accountant by profession. I recently got married and am currently a homemaker, but that can't undo my training. When I go to the supermarket, I want to get the best possible prices. I use coupons, and I keep a full accounting of the prices I pay and the money I save.

Because I am a fanatic for detail, I know that my coupon savings are worthwhile, but I can't say the same for refunding. I believe that sending for refunds can cost more than the refunds are worth.

It takes time to clip and file box tops and labels. When you have enough proofs of purchase to send for a refund, it takes more time to fill out the request form, address the envelope, and then make a record of each refund sent for. Finally, there is the time spent following up on refunds that do not arrive.

Supermarket Shopper

As an accountant, I know that time is money. Is refunding worth the cost? — Gerri Hurst, Colorado Springs, Colo.

Dear Gerri — Sending for manufacturers' refunds as a regular money-saving activity does take at least a few hours a week. If you consider refunding to be "work," then you should, by all means, consider whether the "pay" is adequate. You should also consider what other work you might be doing during these same hours if you were not refunding.

If you could be using this time to make $25 an hour preparing other people's tax returns, then forget the box tops and labels!

But for many people, sending for refunds is a profitable way to spend a few hours of time each week. When they send out a dozen refund requests and receive $10 or $15 back, they feel they have been well paid for their efforts. And most would say they didn't consider it real work.

I have never considered refunding work because I do most of it at the end of the week while watching "Dallas" and "Falcon Crest." I enjoy the shows, and I enjoy turning box tops and labels into cash at the same time. I figure that Larry Hagman and Jane Wyman are making money, and so am I!

Dear Martin — Last Christmas, one of our local supermarkets provided bins so shoppers could contribute food and household items to local groups who distributed them to the needy. It would be nice if more stores did this. Could you mention it in your column? — Anne Bailey, Plattsburgh, N.Y.

Dear Anne — The holiday season is approaching faster than we think, so this is a good time for supermarkets to show they care by offering shoppers a place to deposit a contribution of an item or two each time they shop.

I would be pleased to hear about stores with these worthwhile programs and will do my best to recognize their generous efforts in this column. Readers can write to me in care of this newspaper.

Dietary changes difficult

By BEA LEWIS
Newsday

Making dietary changes for better health is not an overnight process. It takes time to alter an eating style, to reduce the intake of fat, calories, sodium and cholesterol, and to include dietary fiber in the diet.

Recent national food surveys suggest that Americans are becoming more nutrition-conscious. But Gail A. Levey, a registered dietitian who spoke recently at a forum for food writers sponsored by the New York City affiliate of the American Heart Association, said there's more to healthful eating that awareness.

Often, we need to hear it repeated that a prudent diet can help reduce the risk of heart disease before we actually make changes such as easing up on salad dressing, skimming the fat off stew before serving, choosing a bagel rather than a croissant and opting for fresh fruit rather than pastry. The heart association nutritionists at the forum said there are many ways to improve diet without too much fanfare and without spending more money.

But we're tired at the end of the day and might be inclined to select items for convenience rather than for nutritive benefits.

Confusing health and diet messages can create other stumbling blocks. Some foods carry a label that reads "no cholesterol," but those foods might be high in fat. A label that says "no salt added" still could be high in sodium naturally.

There is a trade-off for the convenience of frozen entrees. Often, such food contains excess fat, salt, calories and cholesterol. Levey said. It's not difficult to prepare your own entrees if you organize your schedule. For example, prepare a large pot of chili (a fat-modified and reduced-calorie version is offered on this page) over the weekend, making enough for two meals during the week.

Takeout shops can be the wrong stop for heart-healthy foods, unless you choose wisely. At the deli, choose white-meat turkey, lean roast beef, health and vegetable salads with little or no dressing. Barbecued chicken is a good choice; ask for a bird prepared without salt. High-fat, whole-milk cheeses, salami, coleslaw and most prepared salads, such as egg, macaroni and potato, are best left behind.

Some Japanese takeout shops offer rice and fish entrees. Chinese takeout entrees of stir-fry vegetables and chicken, steamed fish or tofu can be fine if the chef cuts back on the oil and salt. Look for a fish store on your route home that will prepare a fish entree ready for the oven or microwave. Some recommended entrees are halibut topped with cut-up fresh vegetables, and broccoli tucked in rolled fillet of sole.

Salad bars are a boon, but beware of fat traps. Go lightly on such toppings as chopped egg, bacon bits, seasoned croutons and grated cheese.

Eating well doesn't necessarily mean big spending. One of the easiest ways to cut your food costs is to reduce the size of your meat, poultry and fish entree from the typical 8-ounce serving to 4 ounces, said Maudine Nelson, a nutritionist at Columbia University's College of Physicians and Surgeons, who also spoke at the forum. By doing that, you not only cut cost in half but also fat, cholesterol and calories. Occasionally replace expensive meat meals with low-fat, vegetarian meals based on legumes, whose grains and pastas, said Nelson.

To reduce saturated fat in the diet, read labels and avoid products that name as main ingredients eggs or such fats as lard, butter, suet, coconut oil, cream cheese, cocoa butter, chocolate, palm oil or powered whole-milk solids, Nelson said. Because the word fat does not always appear on the label, it may be hard to know what you're getting. Check for such words as shortenings or hydrogenated oils; these are fats.

Potting soil for indoor use differs greatly from outdoors

Allen Wilson
Intermountain gardening

Are you planning to repot some of your indoor plants? The soil used could make a big difference in how well the plants grow. Indoor potting soils should be quite different than outdoor garden soils.

Anytime soil is placed into a container, its drainage and water holding ability changes drastically. Soil in a container with drain holes will hold over twice as much water as it would in the garden. Drainage rate can be reduced by several times.

Few people realize how important air is to proper root growth. If most of the pore space in soil is filled with water, there is little space for air. Roots must respire or breathe, and without proper amounts of air, they will suffocate and die.

Therefore, container soils must be much more porous than garden soils. Most packaged potting contain porous materials like sand, peat, vermiculite, and composted bark. You can also make your own potting soil from some of these same ingredients.

One of my favorite container soils is half vermiculite and half Canadian peat moss. For cactus or other plants with fleshy leaves, a soil mix which is at least half sand is preferred.

You can easily test any soil mixture for drainage. Fill a container with soil and firm it tightly around the outer edge. Sharp tapping of the pot also helps settle the soil. This simulates conditions like when a plant has been growing in the pot for some time. Pour water onto the soil and observe how long it takes to soak in. If water remains on top for more than five minutes, the soil is not suitable for container use.

Sometimes soils with a lot of peat moss are hard to wet the first time if they have become dry. A few drops of dishwashing detergent added to the water will help the initial wetting.

In choosing a container for repotting plants, make sure that it is just slightly larger than the rooting system. A small plant does not grow well in a large container. Once a plant has developed several layers of roots around the outside of the pot, it should be shifted to a pot an inch or two larger in diameter. Use only pots which have drain holes. Pots with holes can be placed inside a more decorative pot without holes, if you chose.

Americans save with cool summer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Americans saved more than $13 billion in air conditioning costs, thanks to cooler-than-normal weather this summer, the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration reports.

"This is a result of a warm May being more than offset by a cool June through August," said NOAA's Assessment and Information Services Center.

That meant a saving of $12.16 for the season for a typical American home, the report said, about 4 percent below normal.

On the other hand, cooling costs were $15.20 above normal for the summer in the Mountain states and $2.76 higher than usual in the Pacific.

Seasonal air conditioning costs $319.58 per home, the report said; about 4 percent below normal.

Residents of the West North Central region enjoyed the summer's biggest savings, with an average cooling bill $35.19 below normal. Close behind was the East North ings were $33.67.

Cosmos, sweet corn variety, okra All-American choices

By EARL ARONSON
The Associated Press

The 1986 All-America Selections winners are one flower, Cosmos "Sunny Red," and two vegetables, Sweet Corn F1 "How Sweet It Is," (white) and Okra "Blondy."

In announcing the choices for the high honors, All-America said:

Cosmos Sunny Red is "the first dwarf with bright red blooms."

Sweet Corn How Sweet It Is has "outstanding gourmet flavor with improved holding qualities."

Okra Blondy has "white pods borne on reduced plant dimensions with decorative appeal."

All the winners will be available for the next gardening season.

Judges at 60 official All-American Selections trial grounds in the USA and Canada grew and evaluated these new flower and vegetable varieties. Each was chosen as best in its class, having surpassed performances of previously top-rated varieties.

Cosmos Sunny Red is easy to grow, heat tolerant and makes a good, free-blooming cut flower. It should reach 2 feet tall and 2 feet wide.

Sunny Red was bred by Makayuki Hashimoto of Japan in 16 years, requiring 18 generations of plant selections. As the blooms mature, the color softens to scarlet-orange. Cosmos thrives in sun and will tolerate high humidity, making it adaptable to southern gardens. It reportedly will flower also in low humidity or arid southwest regions.

The vigorous Sunny Red has relatively few diseases or insect problems and does not require pinching, pruning or staking. Grow it directly from seeds on warm garden soil or start it indoors for earlier flowers. Plants will begin to flower 60-70 days from sowing. Mass plantings will be attractive.

How Sweet It Is is the first white corn to capture an AAS award. The AAS reported its "winning flavor also contains the nutritional benefits of fiber, potassium and only a trace of sodium for low salt diets."

How Sweet It Is won high scores "for holding quality both on the stalk and while stored." (Last May we spread a dozen refrigerated ears of the new corn over six days and enjoyed it as much on the last day as the first.)

Ears are about 8 inches long; maturity ranges from 74 days in southern areas to as in the North [illegible] isolate it from other growing sweet corn varieties.

Outdoors, sow seed in warm soil, at the time you plant cucumbers and squash. Indoors, seed can be sown directly into 3- to 4-inch peat pots with porous soil mix and transplanted in two or three weeks.

Okra Blondy impressed judges with its earliness, productivity and spineless pods. Ron Robbins, the breeder, named this winner Blondy because of the novel white pods.

Okra has been considered mostly a southern crop but Blondy proved productive even in Maine.

Low in calories, okra decorates fresh salads with pods sliced raw in bowl shapes. It contains lots of potassium, Vitamins B1, B2 and C.

The 3-foot-tall plant yields pods within 58 days. Pick while young and tender. Seeds may be sown directly into warm garden soil, started indoors, or bought as bedding plants.

The All-America Selections announces a new category — Bedding Plant Flower Trials — for 1986. New flower cultivars grown in greenhouses as bedding plants will be evaluated. The new cultivars also will be transplanted into the outdoor trials to be studied for garden per[illegible]

Coming to grips with pliers

By ANDY LANG
The Associated Press

If you want something held, bent, gripped, turned or cut, the chances are you need pliers. Shop for a pair and you are likely to be bewildered by the almost endless variety of shapes and sizes, but you can get by in your home workshop with three or four unless you are engaged in some special kind of project or hobby.

The kind most commonly used in the house is the slip-joint type. When the pivot is in one position, the jaws can grip a small object. Larger items can be held when the pivot is moved to a second position. In some pliers, a third position can be used for still larger objects. In some cases, pliers can be used in place of a small wrench, but generally it is better not to do so. A damaged bolt or nut may be the result. If you have a small wrench, use it. Slip-joint pliers have jaws which are irregular to provide a better gripping surface. This irregularity is known as "milled," although the term is seldom used except among professionals. It is because of this milling that the use of pliers instead of a small wrench can cause damage.

Within the slip-joint category are many different types of pliers. There are combination slip-joints, pistol grips, thin bent nosers, straight nosers and others, but they are usually for special jobs. However the combination slip-joint pliers is handy if you need regular pliers with cutting edges. The cutting edges enable you to cut strip wire or similar materials. Many workmen have regular slip-jointers plus extra cutters. The combination has both in one tool.

If you do much electrical work, you most certainly need needle-nosed or long-nosed pliers, but many persons find them excellent for getting into places not reachable with ordinary pliers. Among the many variations of long-nosed pliers is one with a special cutter for electrical wires. It is a good tool and probably should be in the home workshop regardless of which kind of projects you generally handle.

Locking pliers will hold something for you when you need both hands free and a vise is not handy or practical. You can lock the jaws onto a nut or bolt and be confident it will hold. Even though the locking pressure is very strong, a gadget on the pliers permits the pressure to be released quickly. Virtually unknown many years ago, this kind of pliers has become one of the best sellers in recent years. Before their popularity, workers used to improvise to enable ordinary pliers to grip in similar fashion. For instance, if you wrap rubber bands around the handles of an ordinary pliers while it is gripping something, it becomes a kind of locking pliers or vise.

There are pliers with flat-nosed, curved noses, diagonal cutters, side cutters, spring handles, so-called pumps, short chains and dozens of others. A mechanic once told me, "If you need a special kind of pliers for a special job, you can buy it no matter how far-fetched it sounds!"

Here are some tips about the use of pliers:

• Pliers can be insulated by wrapping the handles with electrical tape. Or you can buy pliers with insulated handles.

• Pliers should never be used as an emergency hammer.

Moving air, halting seepage will rid cellar of musty odor

By ANDY LANG
The Associated Press

Q. — A dirt floor is in the cellar of the house we bought in the country. Sometime I may have the floor paved, but presently there is a slightly musty odor that you smell as you walk down the stairs. Is there some way to get rid of that odor?

A. — You need two things — more movement of air in the cellar and something to prevent moisture from rising out of the dirt floor. Provide for the passage of air through the area. Are there windows at both ends of the cellar? If so, install screens and keep the windows open whenever the weather permits. If not, install vents. It may even be necessary to place an exhaust fan in one of the windows, but wait a while before you do that. Meanwhile, place polyethylene sheets over the floor, overlapping them a few inches and holding down the overlapped portions with sand.

Q. — I soon will be finishing an attic. I know baseboard molding should be used at the bottom of the paneling where it meets the floor, but in some cases I see another piece of molding up against the baseboard. Is this necessary and what does it do?

A. — You are talking about what is called base shoe molding. It is merely an added touch that is both decorative and helpful in sealing the joint against dust and dirt. It is often skipped in cases where there is little or no fear of dirt coming through at the bottom of the baseboard. You can always add it later if you need it.

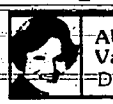
Eating out is precious treat for invalids



Abigail VanBuren
Dear Abby

DEAR ABBY: I'm writing to comment on the letter signed "Sees Both Sides" — concerning a friend who had gone to a lovely restaurant and was seated near an invalid who had to be fed. He said it was a "revolting" sight, and his appetite was spoiled. He suggested that such people stay out of public view.

You said, "Those who cannot eat normally desperately need to get out and dine in a lovely restaurant, and if one encounters a 'revolting sight,' he need only turn his head, and avoid looking in that direction again."

I cannot adequately express my gratitude for your compassionate answer. My husband was a captain of industry in his prime. He developed a neurological condition and became an invalid — so I know what a treat it is for an invalid to dine out and be in the real world for an hour or two. (He has since died, and I treasure those happy times.)

Dining out is a big event for handicapped people who need to get out of their prisons of confinement once in a while. Thank you, Abby, for a beautiful answer.

— D.W. IN BOCA RATON, FLA.

DEAR D.: Not everyone thought my answer was "beautiful." Read on:

DEAR ABBY: Having read your response to "Sees Both Sides" in the Boston Herald, I can only conclude that your feelings are one-sided and selfish.

You obviously condone the practice of doing whatever you want, no matter what the expense to the comfort of others.

Please wake up! How desperately do you think they WANT to be seen in public? You advise those who must witness this "revolting sight" to turn their heads. We are not all nurses and doctors who are used to nauseating sights, and can just turn our heads, forget what we saw and continue eating.

Dining out is expensive these days. To justify the expense, the food must be excellent as well as the service and atmosphere. Not everyone can afford the luxury of dining out as often as you, Abby. Step down from your financial heights and look from a commoner's table.

— DISGUSTED IN BOSTON

P.S.: It would be commendable of you to print this, but seldom do I read where you publicly admit you're wrong. And like it or not, you are wrong.

DEAR ABBY: Can you come up with a word I can use to introduce a gentleman named Sam? He and I have had a very close relationship for seven years.

We do not live together, but our relationship is much closer than the word "friend" implies. Because we are in the 45-55 age bracket, this "boyfriend/girlfriend" sounds too much like a pair of teen-agers.

I have also ruled out "mate" or "partner," as they give the impression that we are married. I don't care for "companion"; it sounds as though one of us is a paid nursemaid. And "lover" is too sexual for older relatives. Any suggestions?

— SAM'S BLANKETY BLANK

DEAR BLANKETY: After seven years of togetherness, everyone who should know how close you and Sam are, already knows. And to those who don't know, he should be introduced as "Sam."

DEAR ABBY: A gay man wrote to you, wanting to know why so many women were aggressively pursuing him even though they knew he was gay. I think I know why.

Because a gay man isn't always spending his time trying to figure out a way to get a woman into bed, he is able to relate to a woman as a person — not an object. Women find this very refreshing. Straight men ought to try this novel approach.

AIDS list stirs growing fear of disclosure

By LAWRENCE KILMAN
The Associated Press

Somewhere, their names are on a list. For the hundreds of thousands of people who have been exposed to the AIDS virus but may never develop the disease, confidentiality is becoming a growing concern.

"I don't have to point out the implications if you label somebody as having had an AIDS-positive test," said Dr. Mabel Stevenson, director of the Red Cross blood bank in West Virginia. "You can guess what the reaction of the public will be."

It starts with a frightening letter from a local blood bank, notifying a donor that routine screening discovered exposure to the virus that causes the deadly disease.

The national Centers for Disease Control estimate that 500,000 to 1 million people fall into this category, but only 5 percent to 20 percent will actually contract the disease.

The stigma surrounding AIDS can turn the lives of even the healthy into chaos if their exposure to the virus becomes known. What if their employers find out? What if the information is made public?

Keeping the names of AIDS victims and those who have been exposed to the virus secret is a major concern of blood banks and state health departments. Security is rarely breached. But fear of the disease is rampant, and some worry that those who have been exposed to the virus may be branded for life, even though they may never contract the disease.

State health departments report cases of AIDS to the CDC, just as they report other transmissible diseases. Confidentiality is protected by law.

With the exception of blood banks and some laboratories, no agency has kept lists of the people exposed to the AIDS virus — until last week, when the Colorado Board of Health became the first state agency to do so.

Officials in Oregon and Arizona say they have considered following suit but a majority of state health officials contacted by The Associated Press said they are not considering such lists.

Health officials in Colorado, where 124 cases of AIDS have been confirmed, contend the list is necessary because all carriers may spread the virus and need to be counseled in ways to prevent transmission.

Wild rice brings smiles to ducks, harvesters in North Idaho

COEUR D'ALENE, Idaho (AP) — Acres of wild rice in Northern Idaho are making ducks, fishermen, farmers and even state bureaucrats as happy as Uncle Ben at a wedding reception.

The St. Maries Wild Rice Growers are harvesting top-grade kernels growing wild on the lakes of Heyburn State Park near Plummer. But instead of paying the state cash for the crop, the farmers tear up weeds and plant more rice.

That work is bringing more feed for wild ducks, game for hunters, homes for fish, and a profitable cash crop for themselves.

"It's a beautiful marshland here right now," said Heyburn Park Manager Fred Bear. "The cattails are turning dark brown, the horsetail rushes are dark green, and that rice is a light green.

"It looks like a beautiful carpet. It's my favorite place in the park."

Heyburn's marshlands were the birthplace for St. Maries' now-burgeoning wild rice industry.

"Benewah Lake was a hayfield until they raised the Post Falls dam," Bear explained. In the 1950's, local sportsmen planted wild rice in the shallow lake system, trying to attract ducks which feed on the mature rice in the fall.

The rice developed into a new strain of elegant seven-foot stalks, topped by long, jet black fat-kernels that are black gold on the gourmet, wild rice market.

Al Bruner, a wildlife manager, had experimented with using wild rice to attract ducks to the Coeur d'Alene River drainage during his 38 years with the Idaho Fish and Game Department.

After retirement, he joined with his son Steve and commercial airline pilot Jeff Baker to begin the St. Maries Wild Rice Growers. They used seed from Heyburn Park to plant commercial fields on lowland meadows near the St. Maries and St. Joe rivers, which had always been plagued by flooding.

North Idaho's wild rice industry has flourished.

St. Maries Wild Rice is now sold in small, eight-ounce boxes for about $5 in gourmet shops. It's expensive because "it costs about $500 an acre to get the crop started," said Al Bruner.

Farmers get about 75 cents a pound for the unprocessed rice, compared to an average three cents a pound for wheat.

But the gourmet treat is a favorite in fine restaurants all the way from Spokane's Patsy Clark's, to Seattle, to the Four Seasons in Boston.

The local industry's expansion has been limited by technical problems, not demand.

"We hate to get too many local farmers involved" before bugs are ironed out and risks lowered, Steve Bruner said.

The growers have had to invent and build all their own equipment, including an airboat fitted with harvesting rakes, seed spreaders, and even thinning tools.

"We're on pioneer ground," Steve Bruner said.

Despite the risks, the partners are willing to put extra time and effort into a "pet project."

"Heyburn Park was initially our primary source of seed," Steven Bruner said. "Now we have other fields for seed. But we're interested in that lake.

"Besides, the research out there benefits our business."

Indeed, Heyburn is now dotted with research plots where the farmers are testing new methods of mowing and weed control.

While St. Maries' commercial fields flourished, the lakes in Heyburn became choked with weeds.

"From the air, two thirds of the lake is encompassed with a heavy mat of weed," park manager Bear said.

Chili fans simmering over rules

HOUSTON (AP) — Backyard chili cooks are hot over the Houston Health Department's insistence that preparation of their spicy concoction — promoted as the "national food" of Texas — comply with city health regulations.

Even a cup of the potent mixture served at a recent City Council meeting failed to sway the city leaders, who voted 9-5 not to grant an exemption to chili chefs who want their weekend competitions to be free of regulations governing temporary food services.

"I'm never going to relax health standards," Health Department Director James Haughton said.

"This is a Texas tradition," chili advocate Kasey Kirby responded. "And Texas tradition is to cook under God's roof, not Dr. Haughton's roof."

The regulations require food preparation areas to be enclosed on three sides and have a covered ground to keep dust out of the chili pot, and to be protected by a roof to keep bird droppings out.

But Ms. Kirby, who has organized chili cookoffs for charities for the past seven years, said the rules should not apply to cookoff participants because they are contestants, not vendors.

"We're not there to prepare food for the masses," she said.

In chili cookoffs, which have been held in Houston since 1972, participants make pots of chili for judging. Then spectators can indulge in the dishes.

In addition, Ms. Kirby said, "There's enough heat that no bird will come near it." And any dust flying around is no more than that in a backyard, she added.

The regulations also require operators to buy permits, which cost $160 for for-profit participants and $20 for non-profit entrants.

The non-profit organization sponsoring the event can buy an individual permit to cover all participants for $20. But Haughton says an organization doing that can be held liable for any health problems which may result.

Ms. Kirby said she never heard of the city regulations until a health department official told her to get a permit. But Haughton, who said no complaints about cookoffs have ever been filed, said his department did not issue a permit for a cookoff until someone came in to get one. And since the dispute began, only one permit has been issued.

"I'm being blamed as the Yankee who started this and I had no idea about it," said Haughton.

So incensed is Ms. Kirby that she is circulating a petition to have voters decide the issue on the Nov. 5 ballot.

Haughton suggested that instead of a referendum, the city should just give his department $30,000 to purchase umbrellas. Then participants who apply for a permit also can get an umbrella on loan.

But that doesn't satisfy Ms. Kirby, who said she wants to "send a message to the health department to take care of restaurants and leave charity-oriented things alone."
